INTRODUCTION

Serbian history is rich in events either so tragic or so heroic in nature that they grew to be an intrinsic part of Serbian collective consciousness and collective memory. One such event undoubtedly is the Kragujevac massacre, on October 21st, 1941. Although that autumn witnessed several mass reprisals against innocent civilians by the German army (in Belgrade, Šabac, Kraljevo, and Draginac), the shooting in Kragujevac rose to symbolize all of these sufferings. An impartial observer might ask what sets the massacre in Kragujevac apart from the executions in other Serbian cities. According to the majority of researchers, the reasons behind such a claim are the execution method, in part the demographics of those executed, public reaction during the war, and the attitude towards the Kragujevac tragedy after the war and up to the present day.

Concerning the execution method, it's a historical fact that nowhere in Serbia had there so many people been executed in just one day, in the course of just seven hours.

Although contemporaries were shocked by the sheer scale of the crime, all of them were especially appalled by the execution of approximately 300 high school students from Kragujevac, as well as other boys of that age and local shoe-shines, small children between the ages of 12 and 15.

The tragedy of Kragujevac resonated strongly, in Serbia, and then worldwide. All relevant factors of the wartime scene in Serbia, acting on their viewpoints, reacted to the crime committed by German occupying forces – partisans, the chetniks commanded by

Dragoljub Draža Mihailović, the chetniks commanded by Kosta Milovanović Pećanac, the Serbian Volunteer Corps (Srpski dobrovoljački korpus - Ljotićevci), as well as the Serbian State Guard (Srpska državna straža - Nedićevci). Abroad, the Yugoslav Royal Government reacted, as well as official representatives of all allied countries. Students of the Piedade Grammar School in Rio de Janeiro Brazil took part in a particularly spectacular event. They pushed for and succeeded in organizing a solemn mass in memory of the professors and students of the Kragujevac Gymnasium who were executed. The mass was held in the church of Saint Francis of Paola.⁰¹

King Petar II Karađorđević awarded the city of Kragujevac with the Order of Karađorđ's Star with swords, First class, on October 22nd, 1942.⁰²

An allied memorial service for the victims of the Kragujevac massacre was held in London, on November 25th, 1942.⁰³

Throughout the world, Serbian associations and clubs organized commemorations, and Serbian newspapers reported on the shooting in Kragujevac. Memorial services were held in Serbian churches in the diaspora for the victims of the Kragujevac tragedy, and other victims in Serbia.

Nikola Tesla, one of the greatest sons of the Serbian people, also reacted to the tragedy, expressing himself with warm and poignant words. In his letter entitled „To my brother in America“, from April 1942, among other things, he writes: „ Our people demonstrate such moral strength that it presents a shining example to the world. What our brothers are doing in the Old Country is worthy of the spirit that pervades our national song. What strength of the soul, what fervent resolve, what absence of fear and what heroism these still undeveloped boys showed when, facing German guns, they joyfully shouted:

We are Serbian children. Shoot! What pride all of us can feel knowing that there is no similar example in the whole history of the world.
These wonderful martyrs will live on for centuries in our memory, inspiring us for immortal deeds.“⁰⁴

It's safe to say that this special attitude towards the victims of the Kragujevac massacre carried over into the post-war period. Josip Broz Tito, prime minister of Democratic Federal Yugoslavia (DFY), visited Kragujevac and paid his respects to the victims as early as October 21st, 1945. Although he never visited several other execution sites from World War II, including Jasenovac, Josip Broz visited Kragujevac and Šumarice two more times during his time as head of the Yugoslav state.

The Memorial Park „Kragujevački Oktobar“ was established a few years later, in 1953. Its primary objective was setting up a memorial space. The “October 21st“ memorial museum was established with contributions from the state and the citizens of Kragujevac. The Museum was opened on February 15th, 1976, with it being primarily focused on researching and collecting materials about the shootings and the victims, educational work, and preserving the memory of the executed through various manifestations of different artistic forms and content. So far, the Museum has hosted around five million visitors from all over our country and the world.

Artists dealing with the subject played a special role in elevating the Kragujevac massacre to the status of a symbol of martyrdom.
Virtually no facet of art has left the subject untouched. Remembering the victims of the Kragujevac massacre, local poets, as well as those around the world have written hundreds of poems and songs.
The same is true of works of fiction, paintings, and creations of applied arts, movies, music, and more. Perhaps more than anyone else, Desanka Maksimović immortalized the Kragujevac massacre in her poem "A Bloody Fairytale" („Krvava bajka“). She wrote the poem just a few days after the execution, during one of many sleepless nights in occupied Serbia.⁰⁵

Several books have been written on the subject of the Kragujevac massacre, but most of them are non-fiction or memoirs. The authors of these were not obliged to consult historical sources, not even the ones available to them, not to mention that most of the source material remained out of reach. However, their effort is significant as they collected and preserved from oblivion a vast number of memories, descriptions, and precious details, without which it would be very difficult to reconstruct the complex mosaic of the event. Historians have also dealt with the topic. Authors of period syntheses just briefly touch upon the Kragujevac tragedy. Several historians have addressed the shootings in Kragujevac within the broader context they focus on. Few of them deal with the Kragujevac tragedy specifically. Despite being available to historians, or even though they should and could have been available to them, all historical sources in German and Serbian relevant to this event went unused. Historians remained captives of symbols and therefore still owe a huge debt to science and historical truth. To this day no objective study of the Kragujevac tragedy has been written. A study that would be liberated from the constraints and delusions of ideologies and myths, one that would be based on documents and fully adhere to the scientific demands and principles of historiography.

THE APRIL WAR

The Serbian people have always had a pronounced sense of freedom and justice, having their own understanding of the sacrifices needed to retain and acquire freedom. A sense of duty towards oneself and one's tradition, the conditions of righteousness, as well as a conviction that there is no price too high to pay for this reward, formed the basis for Serbian action throughout the people's history. Upon this basis rest great accomplishments, as well as a discrepancy between ideals and the preservation of the Serbian people or, indeed, its very survival.

It is in light of this fact that the events of March 25th and March 27th, 1941 need to be viewed. The Royal Government of Yugoslavia had buckled under German pressure but still managed to secure the maximum of what could be expected at that point. The agreement signed on March 25th practically guaranteed Yugoslavia would remain neutral. Documents from that period tell us that "neither prince Pavle, nor the regent Stanković, nor several government ministers, not even Cvetković, were enthusiastic about joining the Tripartite Pact, but did so under enormous pressure"⁰⁶. This was especially true after the Yugoslav government was handed almost direct ultimatums on March 19th and March 23rd.

The arguments of German pressure on Yugoslavia (at that moment in time, there were more than one hundred German, Italian, Hungarian, and Bulgarian divisions within reach of Yugoslav borders) were far more convincing than Anglo-American propaganda and their vague promises of help. The decisions of the Protocol on Yugoslavia's accession to the Tripartite Pact were as follows:

- The Axis Power governments confirmed their decision to always respect the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Yugoslavia
- The Axis Power governments would not request passage or transport of their troops across Yugoslav state territory
- Italy and Germany guarantee that, given the military situation, they will not request any kind of military assistance from the Yugoslav government
- When determining new borders in the Balkans, Yugoslav interests in a territorial link with the Aegean Sea by way of expanding its sovereignty to the city and port of Thessaloniki are to be considered⁰⁷

One should note that the German High Command was not satisfied with the provision of the Protocol that did not require the passage or transport of troops across Yugoslav territory, but “on March 25th had to concede defeat when confronted with the Ministry of foreign affairs”.⁰⁸

The public, primarily and almost exclusively Serbian, reacted negatively to the Protocol on Yugoslavia's accession to the Tripartite pact being signed. The coup of March 27th was an expression of this public revolt, but also an act of the secret police of Great Britain. Britain desperately needed there to be at least one other open front in Europe, to somewhat ease the pressure found themselves suffering at the time. After the coup, there was a curious attempt made by Yugoslav government and minister of foreign affairs Momir Ninčić to convince the German envoy in Belgrade, Viktor von Heeren, that the Yugoslavia remained true to the terms of the pact. Considering this “Serbian betrayal”, Adolf Hitler set into motion a chain of events that could no longer be stopped. So it was that the coup led Yugoslavia, and especially the Serbian people, into a wartime catastrophe and terrible suffering.⁰⁹

Hitler, aided by Italy and Hungary, in yet another Blitzkrieg, vented his fury against Yugoslavia (Serbia). Although Germany already had a war plan against Yugoslavia, in case it did not join the Tripartite pact, at the moment of the coup there were no initial operational plans, nor were there joint plans for the involvement of Italy, Hungary, Romania, and Bulgaria in this war.¹⁰ This is why nine days passed between the coup and the German attack on Yugoslavia being launched. Yugoslavia suffered military defeat and was destroyed as a country between April 6th and April 18th, 1941. Individual examples of a heroic defense by single units and soldiers can't change the overall impression of a debacle suffered in a short-lived war.

A few units of the Yugoslav military were stationed in Kragujevac – a bicycle platoon of some 120 soldiers and the 2nd Cavalry squadron under Captain Evgenije Bogojevski. A mixed detachment, consisting of a pyrotechnics battalion, a reserve battalion, an equestrian division, and parts of the supplemental regiment was quickly formed and deployed to close off the Jagodina-Sabanta-Kragujevac straight, which was under attack by German forces. Airplanes stationed at the military airport in Kragujevac and the airport in Dragučica barely made it off the ground during the April war. In the night between April 10th and April 11th, all of the airplanes burned on the ground. The day after that, April 11th, around 10 A.M., after having crushed resistance on the outskirts of the city, parts of the German 11th Armored Division occupied Kragujevac. There were numerous casualties among the defenders and the attackers, but they couldn't change the inevitable outcome. Many residents of Kragujevac found themselves in prisoner-of-war camps all across Europe after the April War had ended.

The act of capitulation was signed April 17th at 9 P.M, with the so-called armistice coming into effect on April 18th, at noon. This act was signed by Army General Maximilian von Weichs, on the German side; Colonel Luigi Bonfatti, on the Italian side, and on the Yugoslav side, former Minister of Foreign Affairs Aleksandar Cincar Marković and General Radivoje Janković. With this act, Yugoslavia suffered a military defeat. What followed was the destruction of Yugoslavia as a state. Based on Hitler's Temporary Directives for the Division of Yugoslavia,¹¹ the Chief of Staff of the German high command, Wilhelm Keitel signed the Directive for the Division of Yugoslavia (Pov. Br. 00630/41) on April 12th. The Directive was supplemented after German-Italian negotiations on April 21st and April 22nd, 1941, by the adoption of the so-called Vienna Resolutions of April 22nd, 1941.

After the occupation of Serbia, German military administration was introduced. Heading the administration, as of April 22nd, was the Staff of the Military Administrative Commander of Serbia (Militärbefelshaber), under the command of General Helmut Förster. All other authorities were subordinated to him, among which the Administrative Staff led by State Advisor Dr. Harald Turner and the Staff of Plenipotentiary general for Economic Affairs, headed by Franz Neuhäuser, the former German consul in Belgrade.

In military terms, the territory of Serbia had been divided into four Area commands (Feldkommandaturen) – 599 with the headquarters in Belgrade, 610 with the headquarters in Smederevo (as of June 5th, 1941 in Pančevo), 809 with the headquarters in Niš and 816 with the headquarters in Užice. These Area commands were in charge of regional commands (Kreiskommandatur) and local commands (Ortskommandatur).

There was also a strong police and intelligence service organized in Serbia, for the purpose of keeping the people in subjection. The executive organ of the intelligence service in Serbia was the Secret Military Police (GFP – Geheimpolizei), with branches throughout Serbia. Along with the Staff of the Second German Army, the so-called Action group of the security police and security service for Yugoslavia arrived in Belgrade. It consisted of three main departments – the Secret state police (GESTAPO - Geheime Staatspolizei), the Criminal Police (KRIPPO - Kriminalpolizei), and the Security Service (SD – Sicherheitsdienst). The Germans immediately began organizing a Serbian administration. A Commissioner's Government, consisting of ten commissioners, was formed on April 30th. It was headed by Milan Aćimović, a former Minister of Internal Affairs in the government of Prime Minister Milan Stojadinović. As Aćimović was unable to handle the situation in Serbia, on August 31st, 1941 Milan Nedić formed the Government of National Salvation. Nedić's attempt to establish his own military units, the so-called Non-Commissioned Officer detachments, was unsuccessful, as these units quickly fell apart. Following the advice of one of his ministers, Mihailo Olčan, Milan Nedić established the Serbian volunteer corps (Srpski dobrovoljački korpus), consisting primarily of members of the Yugoslav people's movement "Zbor" (Jugoslovenski narodni pokret "Zbor"), headed by Dimitrije Ljotić.¹²

Occupational rule was instituted in Kragujevac by the regional command Nr. 832/I, ancillary to the Field Command in Smederevo, later Pančevo. One of the first acts of the Regional Command in Kragujevac was to order the surrender of all weapons held by the population of the city. Another important task to be completed in Kragujevac was confiscating the resources held by the local Military-Technical Institute (Vojnotehnički zavod). Because of the work done by their intelligence service, Germans knew everything they needed to know about the capacities and stock held by the Military-Technical Institute, even before the war had started. Looting of the Institute was spearheaded by commissioners put in charge of the operation – Colonel Schenk, General-major Rieder, Captain Ratte, and Inspector Stihl. The loot was plentiful, as shown by the registries of the Military-economic Staff for the South-East, for the period between April 4th and December 31st, 1941.¹³ This is seconded by an article published by Herbert Derr, a wartime correspondent for Der Flyrer, a paper published in Baden-Baden. The edition for June 12th, 1941 reads: “Spacious factory halls are spreading powerfully into the valley. Giant chimneys rise above the sea of houses of this provincial town, whose inhabitants are directed to work exclusively in this arsenal. It fell into German hands completely undamaged... A vast amount of cast iron, steel, copper, brass, lead, tin, and zinc was found in quantities that are invaluable. Countless canons, barely finished at the end of the war, stand on the ramps, almost fully loaded for transport...”¹⁴

The Regional command in Kragujevac attempted to revive production at the Military-Technical Institute, but it proved to be exceedingly difficult. Of the 12.000 workers employed before the war had started, only around 800 returned to work. For this reason, the decision was reversed later on, only for the on-site machines to be dismantled. The Germans took a total of 4.488 machines into storage in Jesenice. These machines were never returned to Kragujevac. Thousands of tons of metal and chemicals were taken away. Many of the production halls were completely demolished. Two industrial chimneys, 75 meters in height each, were also torn down, while the local electrical station was dismantled and transported away.

THE UPRISING

The occupation and partition of Yugoslavia were the historical framework for the terrible suffering of the Serbian people. The Serbian national being had been torn apart. Parts of the Serbian people found themselves in occupied territories and in the Independent State of Croatia (ISC). All of the occupying regimes pursued a highly repressive policy towards the Serbian people, with elements of genocide, but nowhere, as in the ISC, were the Serbs confronted with the horror of biological annihilation.

Starting with the first days of occupation, base instincts, historical complexes, and religious fanaticism surfaced among the occupiers, resulting in murders, looting, and the expulsion of the Serbian people. Columns of the unfortunate, who managed to escape the terror and destruction, flowed into Serbia.

The German occupation brought with it plundering and terror – arrests, killings, deportation to camps. Even so, life in German-occupied territories, at least during the first days of occupation, was much more tolerable than in the territories occupied by Hungary, Bulgaria, and in the ISC. Germans in Serbia launched the slogan “Work, order and peace”, but the Serbian people, used to uprisings and insurrections soon shattered any existing illusions of peacefully governing Serbia.

In late April and early May, all throughout Serbia and Montenegro, there were many insurgent groups and individuals, primarily consisting of officers and soldiers of the Yugoslav army who avoided getting captured. Major Dragutin Keserović assembled his group in the vicinity of Kruševac. Kosta Milovanović Pećanac had his group gather in Sokolovac, near Kuršumlija, towards Kosovo. Another group gathered around Lieutenant Colonel Milutin Radojević, near Stalać and Žitkovac. The group led by Mašan Đurović operated in the Ibar region. Ljuba Milovanović organized a group in Trbušnica, in the Kolubara district. There were several groups of armed men in the Golija mountains.

There were numerous armed groups in Montenegro. The self-proclaimed Field Marshal (vojvoda) Radojica Nikčević, with his group, managed to attend the meeting in Ravna Gora called by Colonel Dragoljub Draža Mihailović, who was laying the groundwork for his own organization.

As Jovan Marjanović concludes, “after the April War, shooting at the enemy in Yugoslavia didn’t cease. It was just that now it was the people themselves doing the shooting.”¹⁵ These groups would “encounter enemy patrols or smaller units of occupying forces here and there, which would usually lead to armed skirmishes.”¹⁶ What was probably the first conflict with occupying forces took place on April 21st, 1941 in the vicinity of the village Donji Dobrić, in the Jadar region (three kilometers south of Lešnica). A small group of chetniks (četnici), formed by locals, attacked a detachment of the German 60th division, assigned to search the village. A German lieutenant colonel was killed, while another was wounded, as was a sergeant. In retaliation, the Germans burned the village of Donji Dobrić to the ground.¹⁷

There were certainly several similar incidents, as they warranted a reaction by Maximilian von Weichs, commander of the 2nd German Army, who in his directive from April 28th, 1941, writes: “The increasing number of subversive attacks on German soldiers calls for the most severe counter-measures. It is only swift and ruthless action that will ensure peace and safety, as well as ward off the formation of new mobs.”¹⁸ In the report submitted by the Staff of the 60th German Infantry division, submitted on May 17th, 1941, there was mention of the attacks on German units and the perpetrators of these attacks: “Other than these groups whose only objective was that of robbery, Serbian political extremists who call themselves chetniks have also gathered occasionally... Chetniks want to present themselves as being a large organization that enjoys broad support. However, the fact that they only dare appear in small, remote communities shows how influential they really are.”¹⁹ Since the clashes weren’t about to stop, and the “swift and ruthless action” was not effective, the Staff of the 60th division issued an order on the 19th of May 1941, stating that for every German soldier killed 100 Serbs would be shot or hanged.

As can be concluded, disregarding the terminology used by the occupying forces, resistance in Serbia and Montenegro developed from a source of love of freedom and protest against the occupation of the country. In other regions inhabited by Serbs, primarily in the ISC, resistance was initially just a fight for survival. This was addressed by Josip Broz Tito in the issue of the Supreme Staff Bulletin for February-March 1942, stating: “Faced with the danger of being completely eradicated, the Serbian people in these areas rose up in arms to protect their own survival.”²⁰

Out of many groups taking part in the uprising, only two managed to grow into movements. One of these was the group gathered around Kosta Milovanović Pećanac, but from the very start, and officially as of August 18th, 1941, he started openly collaborating with the Germans and Italians.

The second group that grew into a movement was the one gathered around Dragoljub Draža Mihailović, congregating in the Ravna Gora.²¹ Irrefutable facts state that Mihailović refused to surrender to Germany's occupying forces on April 15th, in the vicinity of Doboj. With a group of officers and soldiers he made his way to Serbia and most probably reached Ravna Gora highland on May 11th, 1941.²² This location would become the center of his movement.

At that time, Mihailović likely had no long-term plan for what to do next, nor did he anticipate a prolonged stay in Ravna Gora.²³ However, after a meeting with a group of officers in Struganik, on May 14th and 15th, at the home of Aleksandar Mišić, the initial organization and general tactic of the resistance movement was defined.

The basis of Mihailović's tactic can be boiled down to the following ideas:

- form a complete guerrilla organization
- avoid premature action and unnecessary engagements
- no sacrifices
- wait for the most opportune moment, when the chance for success is at its peak, and then lead a general uprising
- seek the support of Great Britain, as an ally nation²⁴

“The strategy adopted by Mihailović leans on the traditional stance, reaching back primarily to World War I, that resistance is to be kept on the level of guerrilla warfare, to not further endanger the lives and property of a depleted nation.”²⁵ This strategy also corresponded with the position of Serbian nationalist forces abroad, not to resist occupying forces and risk the further shedding of Serbian blood. The same opinion on military action by the chetniks was held by Hugh Dalton, the British Minister of economic warfare. He insisted on guerrilla actions and sabotage being limited to an extent that would prevent a lowering in the number of enemy forces engaged in the region. In his opinion, widespread uprisings and taking part in ambitious operations would lead to stern reprisals. Therefore, a widespread illegal organization should be formed, ready to rise when it gets a signal to do so.²⁶

In the meantime, Dragoljub Mihailović formed the Operational Mountain Staff (Operativni Gorski Štab). On June the 1st 1941, he issued Instruction Nr. 5 (Instrukcija br. 5), containing guidelines for the engagement and organization of individual units and building a broader movement among the people.²⁷ He wanted to give his movement legitimacy by making it a successor to the institutions of the Kingdom of Yugoslavia. He therefore named his units the Yugoslav Army in the Fatherland (Jugoslovenska vojska u otadžbini), even though it consisted primarily of Serbs.

Some historians believe that “the emergence of Dragoljub Mihailović on the political scene after the April war had ended wasn't accidental, but rather preceded by his earlier anti-fascist and anti-communist orientation. There is, however no evidence of the existence of an elaborate plan of resisting the occupation in case of the state suffering military defeat.”²⁸ Be that as it may, he and his organization represent the most important antifascist force among Serbian citizenry.²⁹

Because of the catastrophic situation on the Eastern Front, there was a change in the attitude towards the chetniks among the Allies and the Yugoslav government in exile. Dragoljub Mihailović was forced by the situation in the field to change his tactics. All across Serbia units of partisans, organized by the Communist Party of Yugoslavia - CPY (Komunistička partija Jugoslavije - KPJ), were emerging and ardently engaging in combat with occupying and collaborationist forces.

The Communist Party of Yugoslavia found itself in a very delicate position since August 27th, 1939, and the signing of the non-aggression pact between Germany and the USSR. This was especially true after the two sides partitioned Poland. Party discipline prevailed over common sense and logic, because the CPY was, since its inception, dedicated to “educating its members in the spirit of defending the Soviet state, as it arose from the October revolution”.³⁰ This is the context within which the signing of the pact was explained and justified.

The Central Committee of the CPY, however, very precisely anticipated future events, never doubting that the end goal of Germany was the destruction of the USSR. After the attack on Yugoslavia, the CPY’s reaction was prompt and combative. It seems there wasn’t much regard for the official position of the Comintern and the Communist Party of the USSR. They still assumed their actions were in defense of the USSR. While the April war was still raging, on April 10th, the Central Committee of the CPY formed a Military committee. On April 15th, it the committee issued a proclamation: “Communists and the entire working class of Yugoslavia will endure on the front lines of the fight against the invader until victory is finally achieved. Do not let your spirits falter, even if in time you surrender your life to this battle, as from this bloody, imperialist massacre a new world is born.”³¹ And while Josip Broz Tito in his report to the Executive Committee of the Comintern, after the May meeting of the Central Committee, states that the main objective of the CPY is: “Fighting the involvement of Yugoslavia in this imperialist war on the side of England and France”³², the May 1st Proclamation of the Central Committee of the CPY, as well as the conclusions reached during the May Council exuded a distinct feeling of militancy. “Just as the CPY has stood in the forefront of the people’s struggle until now, it will now, even more decisively organize and lead the people’s struggle against the occupiers and their collaborators within the country.”³³

The conclusions of the May Council were as follows:

- the joint struggle of all peoples of all provinces against the occupier’s forces and their agents in the country
- linking up on the ground with all groups and supporters of the former parties willing to fight under the leadership of the CPY³⁴

However, one of the conclusions of this council doesn’t stand to reason, as it states that “the Serbian people must suffer the most today, because of the criminal dealings of the Serbian capitalist clique over the last 22 years”.³⁵ This makes no sense, as it propagates the idea of the collective responsibility of a people for the crimes of a small number of members of a “capitalist clique”. This was particularly unjustified as at the time horrific crimes against the Serbian people were already happening in the ISC and news of them could not but reach the Central Committee of the CPY, located in Zagreb.

After the May council, Josip Broz Tito and the members of the Central Committee of the CPY relocated to Belgrade on May 8th, where preparation for an uprising intensified. Military committees were formed by every Regional committee, and they were tasked with implementing specific actions in preparation for the uprising, such as gathering and concealing weapons, creating illegal units, acquiring medical supplies, conducting first aid courses, etc.

In light of the preparations conducted, the CPY was ready when Germany attacked the USSR on June 22nd, 1941. That same day, a directive from Moscow to commence resistance until the country was liberated from fascist occupation and leave the issue of social revolution for phase two was sent out to all communist parties. Other than the preparations conducted, the readiness of the CPY was a consequence of properly assessing the shift in global power balance.³⁶ The CPY acted that same day, issuing a proclamation calling its members and the people to arms. This call, other than by the directive coming from Moscow, was also imbued with “social aspects pointing to a revolutionary perspective”.³⁷ The preparations for the uprising further intensified and entered their final phase. Partisan units were formed – in Valjevo, on June 25th; on the mountain Goč, on June 27th; the First Šumadija unit, on July 1st/July 2nd, and the Second Šumadija unit, on July 3rd. On July 4th, the Politbureau of the CPY decided to commence with armed resistance against the occupying forces and large scale partisan warfare. July 7th was considered the official beginning of the uprising. On that day, Žikica Jovanović Španac killed two gendarmes, Sergeant Bogdan Lončar and Corporal Milenko Braković, in Bela Crkva, near Valjevo.

The situation in Kragujevac and its surroundings was relatively calm, with no significant actions or reprisals. In late May, Lieutenant Miloš Milojković formed the Gledić chetnik unit, the first one in the Kragujevac area. One of the first actions of this chetnik group against the Germans in the region took place on May 28th, 1941 near Ljuljaci, when a convoy of German vehicles was attacked.³⁸

Actions taken by Kragujevac communists were primarily of a preparatory nature, following the directives of the Central Committee of the CPY (CC CPY). This apparent calm in Kragujevac that lasted up until June 22nd concealed intensive preparations for the uprising that was underway. Tika Kanjić and Stevan Roglić, two prominent veterans of the war, had the following to say about those days: „The Germans hadn't bothered us up until that point. That, of course, had something to do with the non-aggression pact between Germany and the USSR. However, now it was clear to me that they would attack us in the newly arisen situation“³⁹ Stevan Roglić, a future partisan general, had much the same to say about the first few months of the occupation in Kragujevac: „Communists and progressive people, surprisingly didn't immediately bother the Germans. On the contrary, some of the soldiers, although these were rare cases, were even saying how they sympathize with communists, love the USSR, would never fight the Soviets, and so on.“⁴⁰

Post June 22nd, the Military Committee with the Local Committee of the CPY for Kragujevac, headed by the secretary Svetozar Dragović, commenced with preparations for forming the Kragujevac partisan detachment. Finally, the decision to form the detachment was reached on July 12th in “Petrova vodenica”, in Grošnica. At the same time, the unit's command was appointed. Radisav Raja Nedeljković, a student, was named as the commander of the detachment, with Miloje Simović, a farmer from Drenovac, being named second in command. cal Institute and the secretary of the Local Committee of the CPY in Kragujevac was named the political commissary of the detachment. However, the detachment hadn't yet officially been formed on this occasion. Historians disagree on the date of the detachment's formation. Most claim it was August 5th, but there are also mentions of July 17th and July 27th, while Blagoje Stokić claims that the detachment was formed on July 12th.⁴¹ What remains certain is that, when it was formed, the Kragujevac partisan detachment consisted of 3 companies and 62 combatants and that on August 31st the Regional committee of CPY in Kragujevac was heavily criticized because of delays in forming the detachment and being generally inactive.

While the surroundings of Kragujevac were ablaze with sabotages, diversions and minor skirmishes with the Germans, the city itself enjoyed relative peace. It was only on August 1st, 1941 that Miodrag Jovanović and Miodrag Filipović took action, setting fire to the map of the Eastern Front in front of the Local Command building. Another such action involved burning the saddlery and hayloft of the Military Technical Institute on August 7th. The first victims of Nazi terror in Kragujevac fell after an attempt on the life of a police agent failed. Stevan Zarić, a barber, and Božidar Petrović, a student, were captured after this failed assassination attempt. After having suffered savage torture by the police, they were shot on August 21st and their bodies were hung on August 22nd in downtown Kragujevac, "By the cross" ("Kod Krsta").

The flames of the uprising were spreading all across Serbia and other regions inhabited by Serbs. The uprising was carried out by partisan troops, which from the very start were acting on implementing a strategy of mass combat. So as not to lose the support he enjoyed among the people, after "a combative mood took over the masses"⁴²,

Draža Mihailović had to change the strategy he had initially adopted. "After several meetings with representatives of the partisans and an agreement between Josip Broz and Draža Mihailović on the need for national unity being reached on September 19th in the village of Struganik, the start of large-scale actions by the chetniks was signaled."⁴³ Several historians, Branko Petranović included, consider that the "spreading of the uprising in Western Serbia was the result of actions taken by the national liberation movement and the chetniks".⁴⁴

The uprising spreading across the country, but primarily in Serbia, meant a number of political and organizational problems arising. With this in mind, Josip Broz Tito and his closest associates left Belgrade on September 16th and moved into the liberated territory, so as to be in the field, mid-combat. On September 18th, by way of Stalać, Čačak, Požega and Kosjerić, Tito reached the village Robaje, where the Kolubara platoon was located. The councils in Dulene and Stolice were of great importance for the future development of the partisan movement and the uprising. A meeting between partisan detachment commanders and members of the Main Staff for Serbia took place in Dulene on September 16th. The conversation focused on the organization and functioning of partisan units and coordinating their actions. The council in Stolice, near Krupanj, took place on September 26th. In terms of participants, as well as issues discussed and conclusions reached, this council was significant for the whole of Yugoslavia. The main conclusions reached were:

- firstly, the Main Staff of the Peoples Liberation Troops of Yugoslavia (Glavni stab narodnooslobodilačkih odreda Jugoslavije) was proclaimed the Supreme Staff of the Peoples Liberation Partisan Troops of Yugoslavia (Vrhovni stab narodnooslobodilačkih partizanskih odreda Jugoslavije), and the staffs in Croatia, Slovenia, Bosnia and Hercegovina, Montenegro and Serbia were named Main Staffs

- secondly, a plan for creating liberated territories in all provinces was formulated
- thirdly, it was decided to expand the base of the movement by creating People's Liberation Committees and by strengthening the People's Liberation Front
- fourthly, it was decided to switch to rigid military formations (squad, battalion, troop, platoon)
- lastly, attempts to reach an agreement with Dragoljub Draža Mihailović were to be continued

Beyond these conclusions, the council in Stolice adopted the partisan oath, salute and, crest.⁴⁵

Soon, a significant part of Serbia had been liberated. The German troops struggled to hold on to the cities and communications and a large free territory, the so-called Užice Republic, was created in western Serbia. This territory was „covered by a network of mixed commands, municipal administrations and People's liberation committees, mixed, reciprocity and parity-based committees (in Čačak), with joined partisan and chetnik participation in the sieges of Loznica, Valjevo, Šabac, Kraljevo. However, the main features and local trends favor the partisan forces (organization, composition, numbers and so on).⁴⁶

In the reports of the commanders of German units, there is a wealth of information about battles, the enemy, and the situation on the ground. They also show how the Germans were losing control of Serbia. A directive from Wilhelm List, chief commander of the armed forces in the Southeast, dated September 5th, 1941, states that “the countermeasures

⁴⁶ B. Petranović and S. Dautović, op. cit., 81 taken so far have not been satisfactory”.⁴⁷ In a telegram sent to the Supreme Command on September 13th, it is stated: “The troubling development of the situation in Serbia calls for decisive measures... Executive power over these must remain with one single center of command. A person who seems especially suited for this role is Franz Böhme, an infantry general, who is at the same time intimately familiar with the situation in the Balkans.”⁴⁸ In the same telegram, List states: “A connection has been established between the insurgents, whom the commander of Serbia, in my opinion incorrectly, labels as “communists” and “chetniks.”⁴⁹

All of this triggered a reaction from the German Supreme Command. On September 16th, Hitler issued an order to Wilhelm List, chief commander of the armed forces in the Southeast, to “impose long-term order by using the harshest of methods”.⁵⁰ That same day, field marshal Wilhelm von Keitel issued an order to quell the uprising in Serbia. “The Führer has now ordered that the strictest measures be applied everywhere in order to suppress the movement as quickly as possible... Keep in mind that a single human life in those countries often has no value and that intimidation can only be achieved through unusual cruelty. As retaliation for the life of one German soldier, it must be taken as a general rule that the death penalty for 50-100 communists is appropriate. The method of execution must further enhance the intimidating effect.”⁵¹

At the suggestion of Field Marshal List, Hitler entrusted the task of suppressing the uprising to General Böhme, an Austrian officer who quickly advanced in the Wehrmacht after the annexation of Austria. Böhme assumed the position of the Plenipotentiary Commander General in Serbia on September 20th, 1941, thus assuming full military and executive authority. The three divisions deployed in Serbia, namely the 704th, 714th, and 717th, were insufficient to carry out the task at hand. Apart from them, Böhme had at his disposal an infantry battalion and an anti-tank division, which had at the end of August been transferred from Greece, as well as the 342nd infantry division reinforced with a tank battalion, which was transferred from France on September 17th. In the final phase of the offensive on the Eastern Front, on November 24th, the battle-hardened 113th infantry division was also transferred. The offensive began on September 22nd, 1941, with the attack by the 342nd division on the Sava River bend near Šabac. In the order issued on September 25, 1941, General Böhme, addressing his officers and soldiers, stated: "Your task is to roam the land where, in 1914, German blood flowed in torrents due to the treachery of Serbian men and women. You are the avengers of those dead. A terrifying example must be set for the entirety of Serbia, one that must most severely affect the entire population."⁵² General Böhme, who by the beginning of December brutally suppressed the uprising in Serbia (the offensive formally ended on December 13th), will primarily be remembered for his order dated October 10th, 1941, and its unprecedented cruelty:

"If there are losses suffered by the German army or 'Volksdeutsche,' commanders assigned the territory in question, up to and including the regimental commander, will immediately order the execution of the enemy in accordance with the following rates:

a) for every German soldier or 'Volksdeutsche' killed (man, woman, or child), 100 prisoners or hostages;

b) for every wounded German soldier or 'Volksdeutsche,' 50 prisoners or hostages.

The execution will be carried out by the troops."⁵³

After September 19th and the Struganik Agreement, negotiations took place between partisan and Chetnik units in the vicinity of Kragujevac. As a result of these negotiations, a joint attack and the liberation of Gornji Milanovac followed on September 29th, 1941.

Various views of this event have been published in historiography. Blagoje Stokić⁵⁴ and Jovan Marjanović⁵⁵ believe that parts of the Čačak and Kragujevac partisan units liberated Gornji Milanovac. In the monograph on the "Takovo Uprising" (Takovski ustanak) Gymnasium in Gornji Milanovac, in addition to the Ljubić and Takovo battalions of the Čačak People's Liberation Partisan troops, there is also mention made of Chetniks: "The Chetniks, after having agreed with the Battalion leadership on a joint attack before the Milanovac assault, held the road towards Takovo."⁵⁶ Colonel Sergije Živanović claims that the liberation of Gornji Milanovac was carried out by the Takovo battalion of the Čačak People's Liberation Partisan troops, under the command of Branko Rakić and the Takovo Chetnik unit under the command of Zvonko Vučković. He provides very precise data on casualties suffered in this operation (Germans - 10 dead and 83 captured, Chetniks - seven dead and 20 wounded, and partisans - 20 dead and multiple wounded), but he mistakenly dates this event to September 30th.⁵⁷ Historiography, in addition to this incorrect date, also wrongly cites September 28th as the day Gornji Milanovac was liberated. In publications concerning this event, one document is regularly overlooked - the Report of the Kragujevac People's Liberation Partisan troops Staff, dated October 5th, which, among other things, states: "The Political Committee of the detachment established contact with the Takovo battalion headquarters in Milanovac and reached an agreement... 2. to maintain close communication because the people of Takovo did not inform us of their intent to liberate Milanovac."⁵⁸ The content of this part of the report unmistakably points to the conclusion that the Kragujevac People's Liberation Partisan troops not only did not participate in the action to liberate Milanovac but were also unaware of it.

When the attack on Gornji Milanovac began, soldiers of the 6th company, 920th "Landeschützen" battalion withdrew to the elementary school next to the market and turned it into a stronghold. However, when the bombing began, GESTAPO officer Otto Knet, known as "Tarcan", was wounded. He displayed a white flag but demanded that they surrender to the Chetniks.⁵⁹ The German soldiers who were captured were taken to the village of Planinica, where a temporary camp was set up under the command of Lieutenant Stanoje Letica.⁶⁰

Regarding the number of soldiers captured, approximate but divergent figures are generally cited. Jovan Marjanović is the only one who states that around 200 German soldiers were captured in Gornji Milanovac.⁶¹

The events in Gornji Milanovac are confirmed in a report by General Franz Böhme, dated October 9th, 1941, which states: "According to the statements by the prisoners, 70 German soldiers captured near Gornji Milanovac, are held by Lieutenant Colonel Mihailović, in the vicinity of Planinica (25 km northeast of Valjevo)".⁶² Additional confirmation comes from two German non-commissioned officers, Franz Eger and Franz Kleinod, who escaped Chetnik captivity on October 22nd.⁶³

The German command deemed the capture of this unit to be exceptionally important and spared no measures in securing its release. On October 3rd General Böhme reported to the Commander of the Armed Forces in the Southeast: "The battalion sent against Gornji Milanovac was tasked with setting the place on fire and arresting hostages to secure the release of soldiers of the garrison troops who were captured."⁶⁴ That same day, he reported to the Supreme Command: "The garrison in Gornji Milanovac suffered 10 dead and 60 missing."⁶⁵ When on October 4th, 1941, a patrol consisting of 4 non-commissioned officers and 40 soldiers was captured (it is not mentioned where), Böhme offered up an interesting explanation of the reasons behind the capture. In his order of October 8th, he states: "In both cases, the same circumstances led to the dishonorable outcome for the German soldier. Our side made a grave mistake in negotiating with the insurgents. In both cases, the troops allowed themselves to be deceived by the promise of an "honorable departure" instead of defending themselves until the last bullet is spent."⁶⁶

The task of liberating the 6th company of the 920th battalion or, if unsuccessful, burning Gornji Milanovac down, was entrusted to the 3rd battalion of the 749th regiment of the 717th division, which was stationed in Kragujevac. The first action was taken on October 5th. The battalion broke through to Gornji Milanovac, but efforts to make contact with the captured company yielded no results. Hostages were taken, but then the battalion's commander, Captain Fritz Fidler, received a call for help from another German unit advancing towards Rudnik. Considering it more important to provide assistance to the unit under threat, Captain Fidler released the hostages and, without burning down the town, headed towards Rudnik. After providing assistance, the 3rd battalion returned to Kragujevac on October 8th. Because his mission was unsuccessful, Captain Fidler faced significant problems and had to write a statement to the higher command. New orders calling for action followed on October 10th.⁶⁷

At that time, the Kragujevac partisan unit and the Gruža Chetnik unit were in the final stages of negotiations, carried out from October 10th to October 13th in Ljuljaci and Vračevšnica.⁶⁸ Radisav Nedeljković and Miodrag Plošević signed an agreement that read: "Joint fight against the Germans, a joint siege of Kragujevac, a joint mobilization, a joint appeal for food collection, but separate warehouses, investigation of all wrongdoings and punishment of culprits."⁶⁹

Following the order issued on October 10th, 1941, the 3rd battalion of the 749th regiment, reinforced with three tanks, initiated a new advance towards Gornji Milanovac, on October 14th. Preceding the German column, there were 30 hostages from Kragujevac. Arrested on October 13th, their task was to clear obstacles on the road. Due to numerous obstacles and frequent minor skirmishes, the column reached Vračevšnica in the evening and spent the night there. The march continued in the morning, with more obstacles and minor conflicts along the way. The 3rd battalion managed to reach Gornji Milanovac in the evening on October 15th. Confirmation of this sequence of events can be found in the Daily Report of the 717th Division: "The 3rd Battalion of the 749th Infantry Regiment, after overcoming six trenches, five bridges blown up, and three obstacles made from stones, reached Milanovac on October 15th at 18:15."⁷⁰ The sole survivor of among the hostages from this group confirms the accuracy of the information contained in this report.⁷¹ Since they again failed to establish contact with the captured company, Gornji Milanovac was set on fire and turned into ash, while 133 hostages were taken. “On that day, the Germans burned Gornji Milanovac to the ground. They took forty citizens from the town and another ninety-three from the surrounding villages they passed through.”⁷² Among the hostages, there was a group of women, “but they were released along the way, while the hostages were taken to Kragujevac. Thirty-two of the forty hostages from Gornji Milanovac were shot in Kragujevac on October 21st, 1941.”⁷³

Around two or three in the morning on October 16th, 1941, the 3rd battalion set out to return to Kragujevac. Near Ljuljaci, at Dumača, a fierce skirmish occurred with the insurgents. Nine German soldiers were killed, and 27 were wounded, one of whom later died. After collecting their dead and wounded soldiers, the 3rd battalion managed to return to Kragujevac that same day at 19h.⁷⁴ Both the partisans and the Chetniks suffered losses. While partisan reports do not specify their casualties, publications of Chetnik provenance state that there were nine fallen fighters, including two lieutenants, Blagoje Stojančević and Miloš Mojsilović, three non-commissioned officers, one former gendarmerie sergeant, and three fighters.⁷⁵ German sources stating the losses to the opposing side can also be found. For example, the aforementioned Daily Report of the 717th Division states 25 dead.⁷⁶ In his report from October 20th, 1941, “On the mass shooting in Kragujevac”, the District Commander of Kragujevac, Otto von Bischoffshausen states that there were 87 dead.⁷⁷ General Böhme, in a report from October 22nd, 1941, mentions that there were 62 dead in the enemy ranks.⁷⁸ On October 18th, 1941, concerning these battles, the Kragujevac Partisan Detachment issued Notice No. 6, which states, among other things:

“The Partisans and the Chetniks of Colonel Draža Mihailović jointly confronted that human scum. In fierce battles... Partisans and Chetniks - a symbol of Serbian unity and the embodiment of the most glorious freedom fighting tradition of their people - defended every inch of the road, inflicting bloody losses on the Germans and their puppet Nedić.”⁷⁹

THE VILLAGES,
OCTOBER 19TH

The gates of hell had been opened for Kragujevac. All actors of the impending tragedy were arriving or already in Kragujevac. There was the 3rd Battalion of the 749th Regiment, there was the 1st Battalion of the 724th Regiment (it had arrived in Kragujevac no later than October 3rd, 1941),⁸⁰ there was the 5th Volunteer Detachment, which had arrived in Kragujevac on October 16th and 17th 1941,⁸¹ and there were the innocent and unfortunate citizens of Kragujevac.

After receiving General Franz Böhme's order on October 10th, 1941, the headquarters of the 717th Division forwarded it to the regimental commanders on October 14th. Upon receiving reports about the losses suffered by the 3rd Battalion, Major Otto Desch, the commander of the 749th Regiment, issued an order for retaliation to Captain Fritz Fiedler, the commander of the 3rd Battalion, and Major Paul König, the commander of the attached 1st Battalion of the 724th Regiment. As the highest-ranking German officer in Kragujevac and the commander of the garrison, Major König was entrusted with the execution of the order passed down by the commander of the 749th Regiment. The previously cited order by General Franz Böhme, from ⁸⁰ There is no precise information about the arrival of this battalion (or the "punitive expedition" as Kragujevac residents referred to it). However, data from the operational diary of the 704th Division establishes the timeframe for this battalion arriving in Kragujevac, which was no later than October 3rd 1941. - Зборник..., I, 672.

October 10th was precise in stating: "The commanders of the garrison are responsible for arrests."⁸²

There is no German document with an order for the shooting in Kragujevac, so the content and the exact time of its issuance are not known. However, the timeframe before and after which this order could not have been issued is known, which is the return of the 3rd Battalion from Gornji Milanovac on October 16th at 7:00 PM and the arrests of Jews and Communists on the evening of October 18th.

Along with the aforementioned battalions of the regular army, all German structures in the city actively participated in the punitive action, including:

- The Secret Military Police (GFP), headed by Commissioner Rudolf Berg, a former police inspector in Austria.
- A unit of military gendarmerie subordinate to the district commander, led by Commander Lieutenant Franz Hesel.
- The "Werkschutz" industrial protection unit, consisting mainly of Germans from Banat, with around 80 people.
- The military auto base HKP-533, with around 200 people.
- The local organization of "Volksdeutsche," some 90 people, and the semi-military organization "German Squad" (Deutsche Mannschaft), consisting of around 80 people.

Upon receiving orders for retribution, the first action taken was to arrest Jews, nationalists, communists, members of their families, and sympathizers. On the evening of October 18th, all Jewish men, prominent nationalists, and communists were arrested based on a list that the city police department had received from Belgrade that same day. During the arrests, an unusual case of mistaken identity occurred.

⁸² Зборник..., I, 501.

There was a name on the list - Milica Veljković. However, it referred to Milica Panić-Veljković, recently married to the prominent communist Kazimir Veljković. She was not known to the Kragujevac police by that last name. However, Milica Veljković was known throughout the city as the widow of the Serbian war hero and General Velimir Veljković. She was arrested and executed on the evening of October 20th. Her suffering was immortalized in the drama "Generalica" by the Kragujevac writer and poet Dimitrije Nikolajević. (The drama was strangely removed from the repertoire after the dress rehearsal and was never performed). By a twist of fate, her son Jovan (16 years old), a high school student, was taken with other students to the local stables, but a German soldier saved him from the death march.

The number of those arrested varies greatly in the documents at hand. Von Bischofshausen, in mentions in his report, cited that "only about 70 of them were arrested".⁸³

Major König, in his report from October 27th, 1941, submitted to the 724th Regiment, states: "In the evening, 66 communists and Jews from the list were arrested and taken to the internment camp."⁸⁴ Dragomir Simović, the president of the municipality, stated in an interview with the State Commission that there were 63 men and women arrested.⁸⁵ The arrested Serbs and Jews were placed in one of the Central Workshop barracks, near Stanovljansko Polje. Apart from the individuals arrested, the Germans had in their custody another 53 prisoners in the local prison, around 150 hostages who had been arrested on October 13th, before the campaign in Gornji Milanovac, and 125 hostages brought in from Gornji Milanovac, as well as villagers collected from nearby hamlets.

As this was a considerably smaller number than the Germans needed to execute, Major König called a meeting with Captain Fiedler and the district commander von Bischofshausen on the evening of October 18th. Major König's intention was to have both battalions "jointly take action in the city of Kragujevac, arresting people in the streets, in the squares, and in their homes so as to gather enough for the execution."⁸⁶ Von Bischofshausen attempted to persuade Major König that this decision was not in line with orders by the higher command and suggested that both battalions should engage in the villages of Grošnica, Beloševac, Mečkovac, Maršić, Korman, Botunj, and Donje and Gornje Komarice on October 19th and 20th. He further proposed that "If even then number designated can not be reached, I proposed they search other villages infected with communism, which I have information on."⁸⁷ Major König accepted this suggestion but made some changes in agreement with Captain Fiedler. Consequently, on October 19th, both battalions initiated the retribution action - the 1st Battalion of the 724th Regiment was tasked with carrying out executions in Grošnica and Beloševac, while the 3rd Battalion of the 749th Regiment was assigned Maršić and Mečkovac.

Captain Fiedler conducted a coordinated, simultaneous action in both villages. In Mečkovac, about 130 people were captured and taken to a sandpit on the estate of Petar Matić. Those younger than 18 and older than 50 years were separated and positioned to the side. The rest were brought into a semicircular sandpit, and a list was made of those who would be executed. Before the execution, a "sentence" was read to these individuals, stating: "You are being sentenced to death because your communists killed our soldiers in Gornji Milanovac, damaged roads, destroyed train tracks, and cut down utility poles."⁸⁸ A survivor of the execution, Živojin Stefanović, provided a nearly identical description of the final moments of these martyrs: "After everything had been carried out, the listing, the German commander, member of the GESTAPO, ordered us to stand up, and we stood up, and he read to us: You are all to be shot because of the communists who killed our soldiers in Milanovac."⁸⁹ At exactly 12 o'clock, the execution was ordered. According to the statements of survivors and witnesses, all those separated were witnesses, as they were forced by the Germans to witness the shooting of their loved ones, the first shot went above the heads of the victims.⁹⁰ Another command followed, and this time the bullets ended up in the bodies of these unfortunate people. Finally, the German soldiers walked through the killing ground and executed all those who were still showing signs of life. After the execution was done, the German soldiers formed ranks and left for Kragujevac.

A monument erected at the site of the massacre lists 65 names of those executed in Mečkovac. The Land Commission (Zemaljska komisija) of 1945 found information on 68 persons executed, including three survivors.⁹¹ In his "Record of Executions in Kragujevac and the Surrounding Villages," Danilo Mihailović, Chief of Security for the Danube Banovina, states that there were 80 people executed in Mečkovac.⁹² At the end of his book, Dragoljub Petrović provides a list of 68 individuals executed and three survivors.⁹³ The "October 21st" Memorial Museum has gathered data on 77 individuals executed and three survivors.

Captain Fiedler did the same in Maršić. The individuals captured were initially gathered in the schoolyard, where the younger and older ones were separated, and a list was made of those to be executed. Both those separated and those who were to be executed were brought to a meadow owned by Branko Spasić, beneath a hill known as Bubanj. The group separated was pushed aside, while the group designated for execution heard a "verdict" that, according to the recollections of witnesses and survivors, stated: "Your bandits are destroying our armed forces, our soldiers, you dig up roads, guard bandits. The supreme command has sentenced you to death."⁹⁴ Then a platoon of gunfire and machine gun fire rang out, one after the other. When the shooting stopped, German soldiers started individually executing those who still showed signs of life. Finally, they lined up and departed towards Kragujevac. The painful wailing and crying of mothers, sisters, wives, and children echoed behind them, in Maršić and Mečkovci.

There are various reports on the number of those executed in Maršić. In the record already cited, Danilo Mihailović, Chief of Security for the Danube Banovina, Danilo Mihailović, states that 160 people were executed in Maršić.⁹⁵ Dragoljub Petrović provides a list of 98 people executed and 6 survivors.⁹⁶ The "October 21st" Memorial Museum has gathered data on 104 executed and 6 survivors. Major König, in his report from October 27th, says: "The 3rd Battalion of the 749 executed 182 men in Mečkovac."⁹⁷

At the same time, Major König was sowing death in Grošnica. Unlike Captain Fiedler, König did not gather the individuals captured in one place. His soldiers executed people in smaller groups in various locations, they did not create lists of those executed, and did not read "verdicts" to these unfortunate people. Several individuals were executed in Erdeč.

After finishing the executions in Grošnica, they moved on to Belloševac. There, they executed another group. However, at four o'clock in the afternoon, the second group had a stroke of luck. "As soon as he arrived, the officer looked at his wristwatch. It was exactly 4 o'clock. He took out a whistle and blew it. The soldiers took a peaceful stance. Then the officer approached the terrified people from Belloševac and told them in our language: "Go back to your homes."⁹⁸

In his report from October 27th, Major König states that the 1st Battalion of the 724th Regiment executed 245 people.⁹⁹ Danilo Mihailović states that in Grošnica, they captured and executed 270 people.¹⁰⁰ Dragoljub Petrović provides a list of 228 people executed and 12 survivors.¹⁰¹ The "October 21st" Memorial Museum has gathered data on 234 people executed and 12 survivors.

According to Major König, on October 19th, 1941, a total of 427 people were executed. This number certainly included the survivors since they were all led out for execution. Von Bischofshausen, in his report from October 20th, mentions that 422 individuals were executed. The "October 21st" Memorial Museum has collected data on 415 people executed and 21 survivors.

THE TRAGEDY OF Kragujevac,
OCTOBER 20th

On October 19th, 1941, Maršić, Mečkovac, and Grošnica were shrouded in mourning, but this was a small tragedy compared to the number of hostages the Germans had to execute in retaliation for their fallen and wounded soldiers and in accordance with the orders of General Franz Böhme's.

On the further course of events, Von Bischofshausen writes in his previously cited report: "On the evening of October 19th, 1941, I was asked by Major König to negotiate a new agreement, during which I was surprised to learn that the entire plan had completely changed... To meet the stipulated number of 2.300 of those to be executed, it was once more ordered to search Kragujevac."¹⁰²

That same evening, Kragujevac was blocked. German guards were positioned at all entrances to the city. It was no longer possible to leave Kragujevac, but unfortunately, people could still enter. The next day, all those unlucky individuals from the surrounding villages who, unaware of what awaited them in Kragujevac, rushed to work (as it was a Monday) were captured and taken away together with the other residents of Kragujevac. Arrests began in the morning of October 20th in homes, shops, factories, streets, and at the market. Around 650 workers who had been working on regulating the river were driven away from the Lepenica. Clergy and priests were taken from churches and surrounding buildings.

school, disgracing their professions, entered the schools of Kragujevac and expelled students and teachers from their classrooms. The First male gymnasium (Prva muška gimnazija), occupied by the Germans, operated in two buildings on Branko Radičević Street. From one of the buildings, two classes of 7th and 8th-grade students were taken, and from two classes of the 5th grade, the larger students were selected and joined the older ones. From the other building, where there were two classes of the 6th grade and one class of the 5th grade, no one was taken, thanks to the efforts of the teachers Jelena Stojanović and Vera Donić, as well as the German language professor Anton Pavlitsch. They succeeded in keeping their students away from the jaws of death.

Since the beginning of the school year, the Second male Gymnasium (Druga muška gimnazija) had been working out of the building of the Palilula Elementary School. School director Lazar Pantelić, with a certified "Ausweis", set off for Belgrade that morning to go to the Ministry of Education. Seeing the commotion in the city and at the railway station, he decided to return to school. Threats made by the Commander-in-Chief von Bischofshausen and an order by the city police headquarters sent out to school directors on October 17th, 1941, echoed in his head. He was instructed to provide the following lists by October 20th:

- 1 A list of students who have passed the sixth or seventh grade but have not enrolled in the seventh or eighth grade.
- 2 A list of students who have enrolled in the seventh and eighth grades but have not attended classes so far.
- 3 A list of students who attended classes at the beginning of the school year but are not coming to classes now.¹⁰³

¹⁰³ Архив Народног музеја у Крагујевцу, I-1309

Overwhelmed by dark suspicions and worries for his students and his children, just a moment before the Germans stormed into the school, Lazar Pantelić confided in a colleague: "I feel like I'm on an iceberg carried by a torrent, helpless to do anything to remove or at least mitigate the danger hanging over the children."¹⁰⁴ All students from the Second male Gymnasium were driven into the courtyard. "The officer told the students assembled that those under 16 would not be taken. Students showed their report cards, and soldiers selected boys up to the age of sixteen."¹⁰⁵ Eight hours later, the Germans surrounded the teacher training school, but there were no students there. Only two teachers and two employees were found in the school. Director Miloje Pavlović had not yet arrived, even though his official residence was in the school's courtyard. Two German soldiers went to his apartment. They arrested him at the door, as he was leaving for school, and included him in the column of other Kragujevac residents.¹⁰⁶

During the arrests, the Germans skillfully spread the story that all of this was for the purpose of exchanging identity cards and that all those who did not report would be severely punished. At that time, a list of all family members or occupants had to be prominently displayed on the doors of every house or apartment. Fearing possible repercussions, many who had, by some chance, escaped the first wave of arrests, went to the artillery sheds voluntarily. This also explains the larger number of identity cards of Kragujevac women found in the pile of documents confiscated from the citizens arrested. However, it is astonishing how gullible the people of Kragujevac were, considering that just a day earlier, they could clearly hear gunshots and the rattling of machine guns from the surrounding villages.

Several columns of individuals arrested in different parts of the city merged into one column near the Upper Park (Gornji Park) that extended to the artillery sheds of the pre-war 3rd Artillery Regiment "Tanasko Rajić." At the entrance to the compound of the artillery sheds, people were searched, and their personal belongings and documents were confiscated. Most of those arrested were locked in three of the artillery sheds, as the fourth one had nearly been destroyed and was being used to store coal and firewood. Some of those arrested remained outside because not everyone could fit into the three sheds designated.

Marisav Petrović and his 5th Volunteer Detachment played a significant role in the lives of the people of Kragujevac that day. While the arrests were going on, Marisav Petrović, pistol in his hand, entered the municipality, arrested the officials, and replaced them with his own people - Strahinja Janjić, a captain, was appointed president of the municipality; Captain Dobričić was named secretary of the municipality, and Čedomir Stošić, a lieutenant, head of the city police. They then began the arrests. Among others, they arrested the lawyer Dragoljub Milovanović Bena. Upon seeing him, Marisav Petrović said to him, "Finally, your day has come!" to which Bena replied, "Marisav, for God's sake, do whatever you want with me, just save those people in the barracks over there!"¹⁰⁷ The Ljotićevci also arrested Nada Naumović, a medical student. "Around 11 o'clock, a patrol of Ljotićevci came by, collecting those men who had escaped the first raid carried out by German soldiers. From the neighboring houses, they took Aleksandar Cane Matejić, who, in order to save his own life, agreed to join them. When the group was passing by the local bakery, Nada couldn't hold back and exclaimed, "Cane, what are you doing with these people? It's better to get killed by the Germans than by them."¹⁰⁸ They grabbed her and, along with others, drove her to the "Kralj Petar" school, where the Ljotićevci headquarters were located, along with a prison. There, the Ljotićevci had imprisoned around a hundred people. Among them was a priest from Badnjevac, Andreja Božić, who was a nationalist and political opponent of Marisav Petrović. The Ljotićevci arrested him at the personal request of Marisav Petrović, on October 19th, as they were returning with the Germans in an armored train from Lapovo. Their meeting in the school prison "Kralj Petar" is one of many examples of extraordinary human bravery. Marisav said to him, "Don't you see, priest Andro" – he said to him – "that your life depends on me? If I feel like it, you'll be shot, and if not, you'll be set free!" Priest Andra replied, "Well, Marisav, if my life depends on you, then I don't need it! I'd rather be shot than live at your mercy."¹⁰⁹ The Ljotićevci also arrested Captain Božidar Vasić, commander of the gendarmerie company in Kragujevac. He was interrogated by Inspector Boško Pavlović, whom Milan Nedić sent to Kragujevac on October 13th to settle the situation in the city. When Boško Pavlović asked Božidar Vasić if he would fight against partisans and chetniks, Božidar Vasić replied, "If it comes to that, I won't fight against my brothers, the liberators in the forest."¹¹⁰

The Ljotićevci continued with arrests on October 21st. They drove around the city in trucks, capturing all those whom the Germans had missed, especially targeting the Roma. "The volunteers particularly took vengeance on the Roma... A group of volunteers, led by Momčilo Zdravković, known as "Izrilo", took on the task of "collecting" the Roma.¹¹¹

The main executor of the reprisal, Major König, reported on the arrest of thousands of Kragujevac citizens in a single sentence: "On October 20th, 1941, arrests of around 3,200 men between the ages of 16 and 50 are being carried out in Kragujevac."¹¹² Bischoffshausen opposed these arrests and the upcoming executions. He said, "I would like to point out that the losses of III/749 occurred in an operation directed at the accused town of G. Milanovac, not in the city of Kragujevac. If the 2.300 bandits and their sympathizers had been captured and executed there, one could consider the orders issued had been followed. Executing the partially completely innocent population of a local town could, in my opinion, have terrible consequences. It can be expected that the grieving relatives of the executed will seek revenge against members of the German armed forces."¹¹³ His intervention with Major König did not yield any results. König pointed out that "he must strictly adhere to orders by the Commander of the 749th Infantry regiment, who entrusted him with the task of collecting from the city of Kragujevac the number of men needed for the execution".¹¹⁴

As reported by Bischoffshausen, König allowed some of the individuals arrested to be released on one of the following conditions:

- a) they have special identification documents issued by the Commandant's Office or some other military unit stationed in Kragujevac
- b) they belong to an essential profession or business (doctors, pharmacists, bakers, butchers, food merchants, technicians, electricians, plumbers, etc.)
- c) they can identify themselves as members of the Ljotić movement."¹¹⁵

The arrests were completed in the early hours of the afternoon. Many more events would unfold by the end of this ominous day. In the afternoon of October 20th, the Germans buried 10 of their deceased soldiers in the German military cemetery. The German military cemetery was located next to the old Serbian military cemetery from the 1875-1878 wars and the Serbian and German military cemeteries from World War I.¹¹⁶ Prior to the burial, the bodies of these fallen soldiers were kept in the courtyard of the Upper Elementary School (now the "Radoje Domanović" School). The coffins were collected from the funeral homes "Konkordija" and "Palestina".¹¹⁷

All illusions and vague suspicions in regards to the reasons the arrests of those detained in the artillery sheds occurred, disappeared around 6 PM when the first gunshots were heard echoing through Kragujevac. Somewhat earlier, the Germans took 53 prisoners from the city jail, leading them past the artillery sheds and towards the Central Workshop. There they had already gathered a group of 70 (or 66 or 63) Jews, communists, nationalists, members of their families, and their sympathizers who had been arrested earlier. Above the Central Workshop, in Stanovljansko Polje, these groups were executed separately. Of the first group, 8 people managed to escape. Baržu Todor, a merchant, threw his leather coat onto a machine gun. Many took advantage of this moment to escape, but the majority remained in place, not knowing what to expect. Two of the survivors pretended to be dead and thus saved themselves. They were witnesses to the execution of the second group. Several people from this group were taken into the barracks of the Central Workshop and killed there. The others were shot in a location close to where the first group was executed. For a long time, it was believed that no one from this second group survived. Recent research has, however, unequivocally established that one person from this group survived the execution.

The Mayor of the municipality, Strahinja Janjić, ordered those executed to be buried the very next day. Miodrag Tomašević, a supervisor at the Military Technical Institute, led a group of 20 people tasked with carrying out this duty. As they couldn't bury these people on the first day, they continued the work the next day. Tomašević provided a statement to the State Commission on January 30th, 1945, in which he described the harrowing images from this crime scene, intensified by the tragedy of his personal acquaintance with many of the executed.¹¹⁸

After the workers had left, cloaked by darkness, Viktorija Jovanović came and placed the first two crosses on the fresh graves of her two sons, Pavle and Miloje, students at the Kragujevac Gymnasium who had been executed. In the afternoon hours, back in the artillery sheds, Marisav Petrović and his Ljotićevci took the stage once again. Although König had already determined who among the prisoners could be released, Petrović spoke triumphantly of how he had secured the release of these people, even emphasizing König's great understanding of his actions. Of course, he didn't realize that König, within the framework of what he had decided, allowed himself to demonstrate a bit of "mercy" in front of Petrović.¹¹⁹

Survivors, hostages, and those who were allowed to return home confirm this action by the Ljotićevci. It is difficult to establish exactly how many people were released that evening. Marisav Petrović claims that by 6 PM when this action was interrupted due to a curfew, he had saved around 700 people. According to statements from several witnesses who were imprisoned in the artillery sheds, given to the State Commission in 1945, about 350 people were released home that evening, and around a hundred people were detained overnight and released on October 21st.¹²⁰ Accompanied by German officers, Marisav Petrović, his officers, and soldiers went from shed to shed and conducted roll calls. "As they called out a name, the person would come out. A young boy, a volunteer, came toward us. He was not even seventeen years old, intelligent and kind, a refugee. Around us, there was a group of about a hundred and fifty students.

War I and World War II. Today, to the shame of the descendants of those who were buried there, a dense forest covers the site. Just the graves from the 1877-1878 war and the sculpture of a lion that the Germans erected in front of their cemetery in 1915 remain.

We whispered Save these children; they are your friends! I'll save them; don't worry, he replied. And indeed, as they called someone, this boy would always bring out several students too. So he saved everyone around us. We asked him to save Miloje Pavlović too. He led him out by himself and brought him into the group of those to be saved. Unfortunately, at that moment, Marisav showed up, saw Miloje, approached him, and said, You, Miloje Pavlović, are not worthy of being saved. For ten generations, you've been indoctrinating your students in a communist spirit at your school. Today is the result of your work. Miloje replied, Marisav, this is not the place for discussing this matter. Marisav just said, I'll order them to return you to the barracks. To this, Miloje responded with, Well, go ahead, show that you can do that too.¹²¹ A few minutes later, they returned Miloje Pavlović to the barracks. This episode is confirmed by Jagoš Šaranović in his statement to the State Commission, while Dragoljub Bakić (released on October 21st) testifies that on October 21st when the group was lined up, Miloje Pavlović was separated out on account of his age (53). However, after an intervention by the Ljotićevci, he was returned to the death column.¹²² Miloje Pavlović went to his death with the penultimate group, with dignity, at the head of the column.¹²³

Ljotićevac Srećko Simeunović from Čačak, in an officer's uniform, entered the barrack and called the students and professors to approach the doors. Later, he released nearly all of them. Student Vladimir Nešić Kapama managed to persuade one of the Ljotićevci to turn his head the other way, and he and about ten others sneaked past him and joined the group of those who were released. The roll call was completed when old man Stamenković, with two of his sons, decided to leave. A Slovenian interpreter was standing in front of the slightly open doors. He begged him to let them go, explaining that they were refugees from Sarajevo. The Slovenian let them pass, and a German, a man from Banat, welcomed them, saying, "Your mother is lucky, she just gave birth to you for the second time."¹²⁴

During the night, the Ljotićevci continued making release lists and they continued doing this on the 21st of October too. They took whomever they wanted from the barracks and from the groups that had already been assembled for execution. Often, they exchanged the prisoners they had brought with the Germans. "Among them were a large number of Roma, whom they treated as if they were slaves. They were especially generous in handing the Roma over to the Germans, giving them away in much larger numbers than the ones they received in exchange from the Germans."¹²⁵ Marisav Petrović testified that he had to personally vouch for those he had singled out three times. According to his claims, around 1.300 of those who were singled out were released and sent home around 12:30 on the 21st of October. He continued singling people out until the executions were completed.¹²⁶ One of the heroines rescuing the students of the First Gymnasium, professor Jelena Stojanović Milojković confirms the actions of the Ljotićevci from October 21st. She recollects, "At two o'clock, the first group of our people passed through the cleared street toward the center. Their faces darkened, elongated, wrinkled as if they had just been taken down from the gallows. We could barely recognize them. They had been pulled away from the brink of death."¹²⁷

¹²¹ Равнојорска историја, 149.

¹²² Реферат Војислава Тричковића – АЈ, 110-610-396.

¹²³ Marisav Petrović's impatience toward Miloje Pavlović doesn't have any "communist" background, as many writers have attempted to portray based on their dialogue in the artillery sheds. Pavlović was a veteran of the Balkan Wars and a civil servant with various wartime and peacetime decorations. He was the head of the Sokol district in Kragujevac. He had no ties to communism, and as a nationalist, he was an opponent of joining the Tripartite Pact. Simply put, he was everything Petrović wasn't, and that's where such intense animosity toward him stemmed from.

Although many publicists and historians omit this singling out happening, or only address the exchange, the truth is that it happened, but the extent of it will forever remain a secret. We believe that the fundamental question here is not whether the singling out occurred or not, but whether Marisav Petrović and his volunteers, as they claim, reduced the Germans' crime in Kragujevac through this singling out or saving. The answer to this question is an absolute "no," not even by a single person. In fact, they slightly increased it through their "trade." Marisav Petrović and other volunteers certainly acted as saviors for those they singled out. However, it is also a fact that these same people were killers as much as the ones carrying out the executions for those who remained in the artillery sheds and were handed over to the Germans, in exchange for Ljotić sympathizers.

OCTOBER 21ST

October 21st, 1941, was a clear and sunny day. At 7 o'clock in the morning, the doors of the artillery barracks opened, and people started being taken out. Groups were formed within the compound of the artillery barracks. German officers were segregating older and younger individuals, Croats, Bulgarians, Romanians, Muslims, and members of other nationalities, as well as people with important professions. The individuals who had been segregated had to sit in a separate part of the compound and remain silent. A German told Miroslav Radulović that he was young, and it would be a waste to execute him, sparing his life. Another German saved Professor Tihomir Božić. A German soldier stood in front of the student Miodrag Božić, the nephew of the priest Andre Božić, and showed him a picture of his children, before placing him in the group of those to be saved.¹²⁸ The Roma Milorad Pantić seized a chance and crossed into the other group. The Ljotičevići saw him and wanted to return him to the column of death, but his life was saved by a German soldier of Czech origin. Svetislav Maksimović, a professor left as a hostage, recalled the German soldier Max Rockstroh, who had been a professor in Dresden in his civilian life and who, according to him, "was the only human being among his German criminals."¹²⁹ He saved many lives by segregating them from the groups scheduled for execution.

For those who remained in that group, there was no more salvation. Heavily guarded, they were taken toward the Sušica and Erdoglija Creek and shot.

During the column formation and segregation, several other unique scenes of human bravery and integrity unfolded. People surrounding Nikola Mačkić, a theology professor and a refugee from Croatia, urged him to say that he was a Croat. He refused, saying, "No, I am a Serb! I have suffered because of the Ustasha for it, and I will die for it."¹³⁰

Professor Georg Kovbasko, a Russian migrant, and Franjo Martinc, a Croatian and a mathematics professor at the Civil School, also refused to declare they were non-Serbs. Martinc stated: "I won't. I'm a Serb now; whatever happens to you will happen to me."¹³¹

Miodrag Novaković, a substitute Gymnasium teacher, yelled out to those in the field: "Farewell, brothers, be brave and don't allow these bastards any satisfaction! If any of you do survive, avenge us or be damned." When a German soldier threatened to hit him with the butt of his rifle, he turned to him and said: "What do you want from me, German scum? Isn't my death enough?"¹³²

Many of the people imprisoned, including Svetozar Toza Dragović, secretly hoped for a partisan attack on Kragujevac. But when morning came, and it didn't happen, aware of the situation, Dragović said to himself and the others: "So, our people won't come to free us... We must die bravely, then."¹³³ With dignity and without fear, he went with his group to his death. As he walked along the Milanovac road toward the execution site, Svetozar Dragović made one final attempt. He shouted, "Run, brothers!" As if they had just been waiting for such a signal, the people imprisoned scattered in all directions.

All hell broke loose. Many perished in the crossfire, but a few people from this group managed to escape. Dragović was not among them. Several German soldiers also met their deaths in the gunfire.¹³⁴

Faced with certain death, people reacted in different ways. Jovan Novaković, a craftsman, tried to calm down the people from his group: "What's the matter with you? Whatever will be will be..."¹³⁵

Group of those executed

The caring director of the Second male Gymnasium, Lazar Pantelić, had a moment of luck as a German led him out of the group slated for execution, after looking at his documents. Standing in the group of those being spared, he observed the formation of other groups. In one of those, he saw many of his students. He approached a German officer and asked him: "Where are these children going? I am their director. Please let them go, and take me instead!". "It's not possible", the officer replied. "Then, this place is not for me. My place is with my students!” he said.¹³⁶ He went to his death, embracing his students, and leaving behind five of his own children at home.

The execution sites, the valleys of the Sušica and Erdoglija streams in Šumarice, were carefully chosen. Escaping from these valleys was difficult. Even so, to ensure that escape was impossible, several machine guns were placed along key spots on the slopes, above the streams themselves.

Captain Fiedler's soldiers led groups to the Sušica stream. Here, Fiedler repeated the same procedure as he did in Maršić and Mečkovac. However, his soldiers only took down information and made a list of those who didn't have documents. One of the survivors, Zaharije Nešić, described it as follows: “A German in blue went from one person to another, asking about their year of birth, place of birth, and so on. He recorded everything for each person, and after passing the machine gun, he said in Serbian: “Now, people, turn around and face the stream.”¹³⁷ They had no time for reading out the “verdict”, as this would be slowing down the execution. Even so, it often happened that the previous group hadn't been executed when a new group arrived. People, watching the execution of the previous group, sought salvation in an escape attempt. Chaos erupted, shots were fired in all directions, and many people were killed. Still, several managed to escape. In one group, there were several priests. Just moments before the execution, they attempted, for the last time, to save themselves and others by saying: “Have mercy! Don't kill us; we are not guilty of anything.” But there was no mercy. At that moment, the priests loudly and in unison started chanting “Svjati Bože!” (Holy God!), and some of them raised their hands toward the sky.”¹³⁸

Group of those executed

There was a witness to the executions in the Sušica stream valley. It was Vojislav Zorić, the groundskeeper of the Čomić villa, who also worked the estate surrounding it. Hidden away, he observed everything from close by.”The men who had escorted them to the execution site hadn't moved even a hundred meters away, and another group of people already stood at the entrance to the plum orchard. However, they did not want to wait quietly; they scattered in all directions... One person jumped over a fairly high fence and continued to flee toward Divlje polje. But he too fell dead. A laborer hid in the reed, where they found him later on, still alive but unconscious and foaming at the mouth. Some crossed the road and were shot dead there. Four of them survived, making their way along the ravine on the side of the road.”¹³⁹ Two German soldiers were killed in the cross-fire. After the execution was done, a truck came and carried away their bodies.

In the valley of the Sušica stream, in a ravine near Čomić's villa, lay the bodies of fifteen children, “five Serbs and ten Gypsies”¹⁴⁰ little shoeshines.

The soldiers commanded by Major König led their groups into the Erdoglija stream valley. Without any kind of preceding procedure, they would line up a group and immediately open fire. In one of the groups, Milan Zagrađanin, a student of the trade school, took advantage of a moment of distraction from the Germans and grabbed a machine gunner. The man next to him took an automatic rifle from another German. Everyone scattered. The Germans knifed Milan and then opened fire on the people who were fleeing. A few, however, managed to save themselves. In the Erdoglija stream valley, the lives of Miloje Pavlović, Andre Božić, Lazar Pantelić, Nada Naumović, and hundreds of students and young men from Kragujevac were extinguished.

Groups departed the artillery barracks continuously until two o'clock in the afternoon, bound for a one-way trip. Machine guns were sowing death. A city was dying. And then, everything stopped, everything fell silent. There were still people in the artillery barracks. The Germans kept around 350 people as hostages, primarily for security reasons. The Ljotićevci took around 200 people to the “Kralj Petar” school. They buried the executed over the next few days.

The exact number of people released after the shootings is not known, but according to some very vague statements, it did not exceed a few hundred, up to 1.000 people. The final thoughts of those going to the execution sites were directed at their loved ones.

The Germans confiscated their personal documents, and belongings, and so they were now saying their goodbyes to their children, wives, mothers, fathers, and sweethearts in their thoughts. There were few among them who had a piece of paper, a photograph, some document, or a notebook and pencil, to write their final words in those moments. The archives of the “October 21st” memorial museum hold 42 of these messages, but they can be considered messages from all of the people executed. Three of the authors of these messages, Milovan Đušić, Božidar Niketić, and Petar Čairović, were lucky as they were not executed; they were released. Solely Dimitrije Radovanović survived the horrors of the executions. He was part of one of the rare groups that did not resign themselves to the certainty of death, they scattered in an instant. Chaos erupted; a hail of bullets rained down on the fugitives. Dimitrije was hit in the thigh, shortly thereafter; another bullet nearly blew apart his jaw. The desire to live was stronger than the pain he was enduring, and so he ran, ran until reaching the first houses of a nearby village. The villagers applied tobacco to his wounds and later on transported him to a partisan hospital. He remained with the partisans until the end of the war, when, on October 22nd, 1944, one day after the liberation of Kragujevac, he returned to his family. He passed away in his old age in September 2005.

Jakov Medina, an accountant, was arrested on October 18th and executed on October 20th. Sensing what would happen, he wrote on a piece of paper: “No bread for Jakov tomorrow.”

Pavle Ivanović, a student, arrested on October 18th and executed along with his younger brother Miloje on October 20th, was still hoping for salvation: “Dad, Misha and I are in the artillery barracks. Bring us lunch, a sweater, and a blanket. Bring us a jar of jam. Dad, go pay the director a visit if you think that can change anything.” His father could not help his sons, as he was arrested on October 20th and executed on October 21st.

Ljubiša Jovanović wrote in the “possible changes” section of his student ticket: “Dear Dad, Mom, one last greeting. Love, Ljubiša.” He addresses both his parents, unaware of the fate of his father, who had also been executed.

Andra Božić, a priest from Badnjevac, was arrested on October 19th, on the orders of Marisav Petrović. He wrote on the back of his photograph: “Farewell, my dear ones. I suffer innocently. Yours forever, Andra.”

Radisav Simić, a laborer, wrote in his employment record: “Farewell, Mico, today I perished. Farewell, my darling, let my last thought be of you. Be happy without me. Farewell, Radisav.”

Lazar Pantelić, director of the Second Male Gymnasium, wrote his final message on the back of a family photograph: “My heart and my soul, Miro kiss the children for me. Listen to your mother, my children, and take care. Farewell forever. Love, your dad Laza, October 21st, 1941.”

Božidar Milinković, a craftsman, wrote in his employment record: “Dear Ružica, forgive me everything in this final hour. Here you have 850 dinars. Yours, Boža.”

Sava Stefanović, a gunsmith, wrote in his employment record: “Kosa and my children, I’m going to death, clear and innocent. Forgive me if I have offended anyone in life, or been harsh. I am writing this five minutes before the execution. Your dad and a good husband, as well as a son-in-law, and everything else.”

Stevan Vuleta, a laborer, wrote in his labor book: “Children, avenge your father Steva.”

Mile Mihajlović Talparac found the engineer Nikola Simić and his son Aleksandar, a student, in the Erdoglija stream. Both of them had left a message. Nikola wrote: “Aca and I are leaving together. Love, your father. Live in harmony.” Aleksandar wrote: “Greetings to everyone from Aca. Greetings to my girlfriend Danica.” It’s almost unbelievable that no one from the families ever provided any information about the executed, and it seems even more incredible that nobody investigated this case after it happened. We only know of these messages from the testimony of a person who was part of one of the burial teams.

Lazar Perišić, a metalworker, wrote on the back of a photograph: “21-Oct-941 Kragujevac. Remember me, my dear ones, because I’m no longer here. Your unfortunate Laza.”

Lazar Petrović, a laborer, wrote a message on the back of a postcard: “21-Oct-1941. Dear Lela, Seka, and Bata, the final hour has come. Forgive your father. Love you all. Lazar. I wanted to take a picture with you, Lelo, but you postponed it. I’m sorry.”

Immediately after the executions, local authorities formed burial teams. Around 200 people conducted burials for several days. Some of the team leaders diligently recorded the sizes of the graves, the number of those buried and even the names of those executed whom they knew. Large patrols of Ljotićeveci accompanied these teams. At the very start, not knowing what to expect, and after everything they had experienced the previous day, many were frightened. They were reassured by an old guide: “Don’t be afraid! You know how it is yourselves. The town is under threat of infection. Many people were killed, and there’s no one to bury them.”¹⁴¹ According to the statements of these people, a non-commissioned officer from the ranks of the Ljotićeveci was overseeing the work of the labor teams, and sometimes a medic was present. Their work was supervised by German patrols.

After the executions, the entire area was blocked off. Still, during the afternoon and throughout the first night, mothers, sisters, wives, and even children found ways to get to the heaps of bodies. They sifted through the dead, looking for their loved ones. According to survivors’ testimonies, women managed to pull four survivors from beneath the piles of bodies. They provided them with first aid and informed their relatives of them being alive. There are records of dozens of cases where mothers and wives, both alone or with neighbors helping them, took the bodies of their husbands and sons from the killing sites and buried them in the cemetery.

Mass grave of the executed

Throughout the work being done by burial teams, these women continued to visit the killing sites. Even when there was no longer hope of finding their loved ones, they would come and offer the laborers brandy and food “to honor those executed.” Laborers working in these teams talked with disdain about Ljotićevci looting the bodies. In a few instances, conflicts almost arose between the looters and the workers, as the workers refused to assist the looters, serving the Ljotić agenda.

Graves were dug in the immediate vicinity of the groups executed. They varied in size. The victims were placed next to each other, often in multiple rows. The graves were shallow, so after some time, parts of the buried bodies started to emerge in certain places beneath a thin layer of soil. Over time, all the graves were nicely shaped. In addition to the mass graves, there were several smaller and individual graves. In one of them, three young high school students were buried, “ the brothers Miodrag and Božidar Stamen-ković and Slobodan Jovanović. The crosses marking their graves bore their images with school caps and the date of their dreadful day, October 21st, 1941.”¹⁴² From the previously cited statement of Miodrag Tomašević, we know that in Šumarice there were 30 large graves and 4-5 smaller ones.¹⁴³ After the war, a commission conducted measurements of the graves and submitted a report. Interestingly, this report lists 31 mass graves and several individual ones.¹⁴⁴

Knowing Serbian customs, General Franz Böhme, in his order of October 10th, prohibited the graves from being marked in any way: “When burying those executed, you must ensure that no Serbian shrines (places of pilgrimage) are established. Placing crosses on the graves, decorating them, and so on, should be prevented...”¹⁴⁵

However, despite the ban, people found a way to mark the graves of those executed. "Everyone who had someone close to him perish in the mass slaughter wanted to find solace in having a grave they could consider a resting place. All the gravesites are bordered off with crosses, embellished with names and pictures. There are candles, tables, and benches everywhere. These are now entire cemeteries. It's just that they're very unusual cemeteries. Located 100, 150 to 250 meters apart, arranged in such a way that a person can encompass more than ten of them with a single glance."¹⁴⁶

¹⁴⁶ Реферат Војислава Тричковића – АЈ, 110-610-585.

During one night, after the war, all the crosses from the graves of those executed were torn down. The same thing happened to the old Serbian military cemetery from World War I and the German military cemeteries from World War I and II. According to the recollections of some people, this happened in 1951 or 1952.

In addition to occasional memorial services held at the request of families in the months following the executions, the first public memorial service for all the victims of the shootings in Kragujevac was held at one of the mass graves in Šumarice, on Holy Saturday, April 4th, 1942, with the approval of German authorities. The next public memorial service for all the victims of the shootings in Kragujevac took place on October 21st, 1942, in the courtyard of the New Church. After the arrival of the Bulgarian army in Kragujevac in early 1942, the strictness of the German authorities subsided, allowing the people of Kragujevac more freedom in visiting Šumarice and the graves of their loved ones. Kragujevac was liberated on October 21st, 1944. A rally was held in Šumarice on the day Kragujevac was liberated. The first memorial service for the victims in Šumarice in a freed Kragujevac was held the following day, October 22nd, with thousands of people present.

On the afternoon of October 21st, 1941, several notices, known as “Bekanntmachung,” were posted by the German local command in Kragujevac. The notice read, “Cowardly and treacherous attacks on German soldiers during the past week, resulting in the death of 10 and the injury of 26, had to be punished. Therefore, for each deceased German soldier, 100 inhabitants were executed and for every wounded one an additional 50. Those selected were primarily communists, bandits, and their accomplices. A total of 2.300 people have been executed. In similar cases in the future, even if it is just sabotage, the same strict measures will be implemented.”¹⁴⁷

Fearing retaliation and, in the words of von Bischoffshausen, “possible terrible consequences” for German soldiers, Major König, being the head of the local command, issued a new order on October 22nd, 1941. This order stated that anyone from the age of 15, coming from a house from which shots were fired, would be arrested and executed. The house itself would be burned to the ground.¹⁴⁸

In a report dated October 27th, 1941, regarding the events of October 21st, Major König stated that “The selection and execution of detainees began on October 21st at 7:00 AM, which concluded the operation. A total of 2,300 Serbs, of various ages and professions, were executed. Over the following days, significant unrest was observed among the local population for understandable reasons. Security measures are being taken.¹⁴⁹

In the parts of the Diary of the 717th Division that were preserved, under “Losses of the Enemy Captured/Executed”, the number 2.300 is noted, referring to the activities of the 3rd Battalion of the 749th Regiment, from October 14th to October 17th, 1941.¹⁵⁰

The Diary of the Staff of the XVIII German Army Corps states for October 23rd: “The shootings in Kragujevac and Kraljevo were discussed with the head of the military administration.” For October 24th, it’s noted: “Conversations with State Counselor Turner about the events in Kragujevac and Kraljevo.”¹⁵¹

In his report dated October 21st, General Franz Böhme briefly notes: “717th Division: 3.000 arrested, of whom 522 were executed.”¹⁵² In his report dated October 26th, he again briefly and tersely records: “717th Division: 3.000 captured, of whom 522 were executed. The executions continue.”¹⁵³

These are the details of the shootings in Kragujevac provided to us by the German sources that are accessible to us. It is unclear if these reports existed and were destroyed during the war or never existed in the first place. Be that as it may, it’s hard to believe that General Franz Böme, who generally noted far less significant, even almost inconsequential events and details in his reports, did not provide a comprehensive report on the Kragujevac shootings.

On the day the citizens of Kragujevac were executed, the Regional Committee of the Communist Party of Yugoslavia (Okružni komitet KPJ – OK KPJ) and the People's Peasant Party (Narodna seljačka stranka) issued a proclamation called “Heroic Šumadija“ (Junačka Šumadija). It stated: “An unprecedented crime has occurred. The cursed occupier and his drunken servants, Nedić’s janissaries, are determined to eradicate our people, our enslaved and plundered people... Streams of tears and blood are flowing down the streets of Kragujevac.”¹⁵⁴

Dragoslav Veličković, the parish priest of the Old Church, wrote on the margins of the Menaion (liturgical book) for October: “On this day, the Germans executed around 7.000 citizens of Krag (ujevac) in 1941.”¹⁵⁵

An article entitled “Hitler's Forces and Nedić's Men Killed 5,000 Men and Women in Kragujevac” was published in the newspaper “Borba” on November 15th, 1941.¹⁵⁶ The text of the article provides a description of the shootings but doesn't further specify the number of victims. The number listed in the title seems to have been accepted for a while in partisan communication. A letter from the General Staff of the National Liberation Army and partisan detachments of Croatia (Glavni stab Narodnooslobodilačkih partizanskih odreda Hrvatske – GŠ NOPO Hrvatske) dated December 1st 1941, mentions the shootings in Kragujevac: “In Kragujevac, the Germans and Nedić's men killed around 5.000 citizens and workers.”¹⁵⁷

After having, in his own words, gone “up and down” through Kragujevac, Danko Mihailović, Chief of Security of the Danube Banovina, claimed: “In their leaflets they announced that they had killed 2,300 Serbs. This is also untrue because they only killed in Kragujevac, not taking into account the ones killed in surrounding villages, between 7.100 and 7.300 Serbs.”¹⁵⁸ However, Mihailović's movement “up and down” Kragujevac is more of a basis for his personal impression than for a reliable testimony.

The Serbian National Chetnik Bulletin (Bilten Srpskih nacionalnih četnika), No. 2, from November 6th, 1941, contains an article entitled "Kragujevac and Kraljevo", also mentions the shootings in Kragujevac: "Now almost 5,000 heads have fallen in just two of our towns. Of those executed, at least 4.500 were innocent! Now we can see that the communists and Draza's and Novakovic's people have lied to us."¹⁵⁹

Propaganda leaflets published by the Ljotićevci and Nedićevci list the number of victims from German sources while condemning the Chetniks and Partisans for the spilled blood of the Serbian people. The "Message to those in the woods", (Poslanica onima u šuma-ma...) written by Milan Nedic, President of the Serbian Government, states, among other things: "Count the victims which you, national-communists, as you call yourselves, have sacrificed in Kruševac, Kragujevac and Kraljevo. Will you keep going? Will you continue this futile struggle, destroying the Serbian people? Do you know how many orphans were left without parents? Is this madness? Is this collective insanity? Or is Stalin so dear to you that you are willing to sacrifice the entire Serbian people for him?"¹⁶⁰

Chetnik sources vary in their account of the number of those executed, ranging from 4.000 to 12.000 individuals. However, the most frequently cited number is 6.000. Chetnik sources also serve as the primary source of information on this event for the Yugoslav royal government in exile. Official acts and ceremonies organized by this government mention 6.000 executed individuals.

All publications about the Kragujevac shootings by the Serbian community in America and Canada mention 4.000 victims.

In the statement given by Miodrag Tomašević to the State Commission that has already been cited, he says: "There are 30 large graves and 4-5 small graves. In my opinion, the number of people killed or buried is 3.000-3.500. This does not include those shot in the surroundings and does not take into account the people their families secretly took away at night."¹⁶¹

The City Commission, within the State Commission for Determining the Crimes of the Occupier and his Accomplices (Zemaljska komisija za utvrđivanje zločina okupatora i njegovih pomagača) in Kragujevac conducted an investigation into the shooting, lasting several months after the liberation. The result of the commission's work, based on thousands of statements from family members and relatives, as well as interviews with hundreds of witnesses, is the Report sent to the State Commission of Serbia in Belgrade on July 12th, 1945:

- I The number of original reports is 1706.
 - II From the list of reports by this commission, based on the number of identification documents found with the former city council in Kragujevac, confiscated from people before their execution, there are 146 cases
 - III From the list of executed individuals who have no close relatives in Kragujevac and the surrounding area, reported by this commission in its official capacity, there are 472 cases.
- The total number of executed individuals from the data collected is 2324. This is the total number of individuals executed that this commission has access to.¹⁶²

This is an official document by a legal body of a state and, as such, it served as the basis for the indictment by the Democratic Federal Yugoslavia against those responsible for the crimes in Kragujevac, in the trial before the Allied Military Court No. 5 in Nuremberg in July of 1947.

However, during the war, a figure of 7.000 individuals executed in Kragujevac became entrenched in public consciousness. Živojin Jovanović, who survived the execution on October 20th 1941, was the sole witness of this German crime during the Nuremberg trial. He allegedly stated before the court that around 7.000 people were executed in Kragujevac. His statement was based on the number of black flags on the houses of those executed and the number of koliva brought to the local church. According to later claims made by this witness and the work of some historians, the Allied Military Court (Saveznički vojni sud) accepted this number. However, this is contradicted by the transcript of this witness's statement before the Military Court from July 27th, 1947, where he makes several mentions of around 8,000 people who were executed, not once stating the figure was 7.000.¹⁶³ There is also no evidence of the Allied Military Court accepting there were 7.000 executed. The court had before it the indictments of the Democratic Federal Yugoslavia that contained the number of persons executed from the Reports of the City Commission, within the State Commission for the Determination of the Crimes of the Occupiers and Their Collaborators. The official state document had more legal weight than the statement of a single witness.

A few days after the execution, German authorities handed over the confiscated identification papers and other documents belonging to the executed individuals to local authorities. Based on these papers, a list of those executed was compiled.¹⁶⁴ In addition to surnames and names, the list also contains information about the year of birth, place of birth, and occupation of the individuals who were shot. This list was displayed at various locations in Kragujevac, and it remained in the shop window of the "Peko" store until March 21st, 1942, when it had to be removed. This list includes 1,690 names.

Based on reports from their parishioners and the relatives of those executed, the Old and New Church recorded and created death registers, thus compiling their own list of those who were shot in Kragujevac. By order of the Commander of Serbia in July of 1942, the Ministry of Education on July 22, 1942, the Ministry of Internal Affairs and the Head of the Kragujevac District, church records had to be annotated in the "cause of death" column, stating that the individuals "died in an unfortunate accident" or was "shot in retaliation." The death registers are located in the City Assembly archives, in the Department of Civil Registration Services. Both lists need to be analyzed very critically, especially the list compiled by municipal authorities, due to numerous errors. They can only serve as a starting point for serious researchers of the executions in Kragujevac.

Towards the end of the war, when defeat became imminent, the Germans began systematically destroying existing evidence of their crimes. Branislav Božović mentions an interesting document from the Gestapo branch in Kragujevac, in response to a request from the central authorities in Belgrade to provide information about a particular individual. The branch's response informs the central authorities in Belgrade that this person was not executed as part of the retaliation actions carried out from June 1943 onwards, but they couldn't determine whether this person had been executed earlier, "since the old lists were destroyed in accordance with orders".¹⁶⁵

When writing about the Kragujevac shootings, most historians and publicists state the officially accepted number of 7.000 residents of Kragujevac executed, after detailed elaboration of all references to casualties. One of our most prominent historians, Branko Petranović, refrains from specifying the number of victims but states: "German sources maintain meticulous "death accounts," but they too, probably aware of the horrific crimes, provided a smaller victim toll and intentionally omitted the fact that schoolchildren were among those executed.”¹⁶⁶

¹⁶⁵ Б. Божовић, op. cit., 85

The view of Venceslav Glišić, one of the most dedicated researchers of German war crimes in Serbia during World War II, on the number of victims shot in Kragujevac, remains almost singular. He believes that around 3,000 individuals were shot and concludes: “When determining the approximate number of those executed in Kragujevac, two things must be taken into account. Firstly, the Germans attempted to conceal the truth about this grave crime from the international public and destroyed all existing lists of individuals executed as early as 1943. Secondly, the surviving victims providing statements were strongly influenced by the large number of bodies collected and the tragic character of events that had unfolded, leading them to estimate that there were over 7,000 individuals executed.”¹⁶⁷ Ten years later, Milan Borković provides approximate data, suggesting that the number of executed individuals in Kragujevac has not been established, but exceeds 3,000, according to his estimate.¹⁶⁸

For several years following the war, up until the establishment of the “October 21st” memorial museum, the National Museum in Kragujevac was engaged in researching the shootings and collecting data on the victims. The result of their work was a list containing information on 2,037 executed individuals.

Systematic research and data collection on the victims of the shootings in Kragujevac began with the “October 21st” memorial museum being established. Apart from research in the archives of various institutions, field investigations were conducted in Kragujevac and its surrounding villages, by going “door to door”. The most valuable source, however, are the records made by the City Commission within the State Commission for Establishing the Crimes of the Occupiers in 1944/1945, which offer up a true wealth of data. The original records of the Commission are kept in the Archives of Yugoslavia. Thus a large database was created that made the formation of a registry of the executed possible. A Record of those Executed was compiled, containing the following information: last name, father's name, first name, date of birth, place of birth, educational background, place of employment, job type, home address, arrest location, date of execution, burial place, number in the German list, number in the war victim census list, number in the Memorial Park list, victim's documents, the possessions of the executed, family details, relatives' addresses, informant's address, special observations, and space for the victim's photograph. The complete database has been computerized, and the program allows for analytical processing, such as a list of executed individuals, a list by last name, a list by year of birth, educational background, and occupation. Thus, the “October 21” memorial museum's database of the executed is the result of several years of research and today represents the most comprehensive source on the shooting and the victims of October 19th, 20th, and 21st 1941. The list of individuals shot in Kragujevac on October 20th and 21st 1941, includes data on 2,381 persons executed and 40 survivors. All the data is available to anyone interested, whether they are visitors or researchers.

Just as with the number of individuals executed, there are different sources of information about the number of persons arrested in Kragujevac. The number of those arrested has, however, never been separately researched. In general, the number of those arrested was determined in accordance with the number of executions considered to be relevant. We've seen that Major Paul König mentions 3,200 individuals arrested. The Chief of Security for the Danube Banovina, Danilo Mihailović, speaks of 10,000 arrests.¹⁶⁹ The same number is cited by the priest Dragoslav Veličković. On the margins of the Me-naion, he wrote: “On this day in 1941, early in the morning, the Germans began a raid of the citizens of Krag(ujevac) and locked them up in the artillery sheds. There were about 10,000 of them.”

A commission that conducted an inspection of the artillery sheds and of all the burial sites in Šumarice, on February 20th, 1945, records in their report: “These sheds were 40 meters in length and twelve meters in width. The surface area of these sheds was 1.440 square meters. Considering the cramped space, about seven people could fit in one square meter. So, there were around 10,000 people gathered in these barracks.”¹⁷⁰

More cautious estimates referred to “several thousand”, “all male residents between 16 and 60 years” and similar figures. However, the most reliable way to approximate the number of individuals arrested is consulting the list of those executed compiled by the “October 21st” memorial museum. In addition to the 2.381 people executed and 40 survivors, 350 people were kept as hostages by the Germans, and 200 people were kept by the Ljotićevci for the purpose of burying those executed. There were also those allowed to return home. If we accept the maximalist claims made by the Ljotićevci, that around 700 people were released back home on the evening of October 20th and another 1.300 around 12:30 on October 21st, with around 500 more released after the shootings, we realistically arrive at a number of 5.000-5.500 arrested individuals.

Summing up the results of the German retaliation for 10 dead and 26 wounded of their soldiers, it can be concluded that the executioners outperformed their superiors in terms of cruelty. In the retaliation action, the 2.300 hostages were supposed to be executed by the Germans, and their documents state that this many were executed. However, Major König, who was in charge of the executions, took a total of 2.857 hostages to be shot over these three days - 80 in Mečkovac, 110 in Maršić, 246 in Grošnica, 123 near the Central Workshop on October 20th, and 2.298 hostages on October 21st 1941. Therefore, the “October 21st” memorial museum possesses data on 61 survivors and 2.796 executed men, women, and children on October 19th, 20th, and 21st, 1941.

Even if we assume that the documentation collected so far by the Memorial Park is comprehensive and most reliable, providing a basis for drawing conclusions about this tragic event that are closest to the truth, another question arises. This question has not been asked so far and it demands an answer - why were more people executed in this retaliation than the monstrous provisions of General Böhme's order were asking for and more than the Germans announced in their proclamation, immediately following the execution?

The answer to this question cannot be found in the documents. It must be sought in secondary sources, in the testimonies of survivors and hostages about the course of the execution and the behavior of the two main actors, Major Paul König and, even more so, Captain Fritz Fiedler.

There are several testimonies that suggest that from the groups led to the executions by soldiers under the command of Major Paul König, no one managed to escape. Those who survived from these groups did so by either being lightly wounded or by throwing themselves on the ground before the firing had started. Buried beneath a pile of bodies, they survived until the end of the executions and waited for the evening, when they were rescued. However, there are testimonies, one of which was cited earlier in the text, that mention an escape attempt by groups being led to be executed by soldiers under Major König. The executions carried out by König were organized in such a way that large groups of German soldiers, who had taken over a group of hostages, would lead them to the execution site and carry out the shooting. After completing the task, they would return for the next group.

¹⁶⁹ Минеј за октобар месеци, Стара црква, Крагујевац

Captain Fidler, when proceeding with the shootings in Sušički Potok, repeated the scenario he had employed in the executions in the villages almost exactly. However, these unfortunate people were spared the reading of the sentences. He organized the executions in such a way that he left two large groups of soldiers in the Sušički Potok valley, where they would take over incoming groups and execute them. There were few soldiers left who took over the groups in the compound of the artillery sheds and escorted them to the execution site. This was seized upon by people from several groups, who attempted to escape. A few of them succeeded in saving themselves, but in the general chaos that ensued, a few German soldiers were killed in the crossfire. It first happened with the group that Svetozar Dragović was in. As witnesses recount, "a few soldiers" (probably two or three) were killed. Shortly thereafter it happened again in Sušički Potok, where two German soldiers were killed. Taken by rage because of this initial oversight, Captain Fidler completely lost control when a courier delivered the second disheartening news. This was no longer a mere oversight; it was now his inability to organize the executions properly, and this was happening right before the eyes of his superior, Major König and the other officers. Some witnesses talk about the obvious and visible animosity Captain Fidler demonstrated towards Major König. After all, in Kragujevac, where Fidler had been the senior officer for a long time, Major König arrived with his battalion at the beginning of October and assumed command of the city.

All of this occurred before 10 A.M. There was still a lot of time left, as well as many hostages. It's safe to assume that, with his pride being injured, feeling humiliated in front of other officers and consumed by rage, Fidler desired an immediate punishment of the Serbs for the German soldiers who had died, and that he succeeded in carrying this punishment out.

Major König had no reason to oppose him, as the German soldiers did indeed die, and it is of lesser importance that this happened in the crossfire. The culprits were, once again, the Serbs for being unwilling to go to their deaths peacefully.

This is a logical assumption, it may not be accurate, but in our opinion, it is very close to the truth, how else can we explain this inconsistency in the famously precise Germans. Kragujevac was the last mass execution site in Serbia, and they were precise everywhere, both in committing the crime and in reporting about it. Major König had orders to execute 2.300 people, and he reported to the public and the higher command having done exactly that. As the one responsible for carrying out this order, it was important for him not to execute fewer than this number. The fact that he had executed more could have been seen as a positive by his superiors. However, he decided against burdening them with this detail, especially because mentioning the deaths of German soldiers during the executions could raise doubts about his competence as the commanding officer of Kragujevac.

DEMOGRAPHIC AND SOCIOLOGICAL ANALYSIS

A complete demographic and sociological analysis or study of the individuals executed still hasn't been conducted. For a number of years after the war, there was a template with which every story about the people executed began and ended. It consisted of "the execution of students, professors, workers, and peasants." Any, even the most superficial analysis of who these people were, was lacking, and there wasn't even an attempt of being made at research into the issue. One must responsibly state that this data has been available since 1945. It was kept in the records of the State Commission and in the National Museum, which worked on collecting material on the execution up until 1976, when the "October 21st" memorial museum was constructed. They created the first card file records of the executed, the so-called "kartice". The data from these cards is scarce and sometimes inaccurate, but together with details from the written record, they provided a solid research basis. Many books were written about the executions at that time, but the authors seemed to find it easier to write established phrases than to investigate the documents.

This leads us to the key reason why things were as they were. Careful examination of the documents led everyone who dealt with this topic to an inevitable conflict with the myth of the Kragujevac tragedy, the myth of 7,000 people executed. The society that created this myth was determined to uphold it. Even 50 years later, in the early 1990s, when the press published the first article citing data from the documents held at the "October 21st" memorial, the reaction was alarming. "Bloody Fairytale defiled" was, for days and days, the motto for condemning the authors who presented this data. Their only “crime” could only be compared to the crime of those who carried out the executions.

It was certainly easier to write about this topic from the position of an academic viewpoint, but it was only the opinion of Venceslav Glišić that opposed this myth with his opinion. Later on, he would be joined by Milan Borković. Authors from Kragujevac, and the majority of those dealing with the subject, did not have the courage to speak the truth. None of them published or even mentioned, not even as a footnote, the Report of the City Commission, within the State Commission for Determining the Crimes of the Occupier and his Accomplices, from July 12th. 1945.

Ideological and political constraints were certainly one of the main reasons for adopting this kind of wrong attitude towards the shootings in Kragujevac, but does that really explain everything? One has to wonder where the limit of us accepting these constraints lies.

The myth was ubiquitous and universally accepted. In the “October 21st” memorial museum visitors were deceived for years, every day, repeatedly, creating a great moral dilemma for those working there. This was not only true of the story told to visitors, but also of the old museum’s permanent exhibition. One room, namely, displayed the names of those executed inscribed on bricks. Visitors would often ask how many names there were. The answer had to be 7.000, even though anyone rational could see that there were not that many names. Within 20-30 seconds, they could do a quick count and come up with around 2.400 names. Then the claim emerged that only the names of those known to have been executed were listed there. This was accompanied by another uncomfortable question - where did so many unknown names come from?

For decades, the way in which those executed were perceived was determined by the myth of their numbers. The formal solutions were fantastic. The area where the executions took place was transformed into a memorial park in 1953. A bypass road, walking paths, and, in the meantime, ten monuments were erected. The pinnacle of the form was the construction of a monumental museum, a magnificent architectural building, unique in the world, which amazes every visitor. Several cultural and artistic events were organized, nurturing and preserving the memory of those executed fellow citizens through various forms of artistic expression. Some of these events have a strong tradition, and some have reached the heights of Serbian creativity.

It would be wrong and unforgivable to say that everything done in the past and today is just pure formality. Everything reflects the consciousness, moral attitude, and duty of the descendants towards this terrible crime and those executed. This is undoubtedly one of the foundational reasons for elevating the Kragujevac tragedy to the special status it now enjoys within the collective consciousness of the Serbian people.

In the end, starting with these formal solutions, after decades of resistance and struggle, we have reached the essence of the matter. And within the essence of the matter are those who have been executed. They are no longer faceless prisoners of the myth. They are all here, with names and surnames, birth years, occupations, photographs... Finally, they can rest in peace.

The social structure of those who were executed is quite diverse. Among them, there are representatives of those with critical occupations whom Major König had envisaged release from the sheds. There is no reason to assume any of the reprisals were directed towards a specific occupation. Since Kragujevac was a strong industrial center, most of those executed were laborers in the broadest sense of the word. Often, the term “laborer” (which primarily refers to laborers employed by the Military-Technical Institute) includes supervisors and craftsmen of all kinds, skilled and unskilled workers, day laborers, and others. Therefore, among the residents of Kragujevac who were executed, there were individuals from all walks of life - doctors, pharmacists, judges, lawyers, civil servants, workers at the Military-Technical Institute, craftsmen, traders, coffeehouse owners, educators (professors, teachers, and instructors), priests, students from various schools, peasants, day laborers, shoe shiners, and others. In total, there were 158 different occupations, ranging from bakers to foresters. There is no information on their occupation available for six of the individuals executed in Kragujevac. The occupations of all 416 individuals executed in the villages are known.

Among those who were executed in Kragujevac, in regard to occupational groups, there were 113 individuals working in commerce, 859 in crafts, 43 in hospitality, 29 in transportation, seven in law, 589 qualified laborers, 42 unqualified laborers, 151 clerks, nine health-care workers, 39 educational professionals, nine religious figures, 32 military personnel, 49 with free professions, 13 housewives, 28 retirees, 120 farmers, and 239 students of various ages and schools. In the villages, there are 35 different occupations, with the majority being 225 farmers and 118 workers.

Although a complete analysis of the educational background of those executed is challenging because of the data missing, one can conclude that the educational structure of those executed was quite high. While some occupations correspond to a specific educational background, others do not. For example, clerics could have had either a high school or university education. It is certain that craftsmen, merchants, lawyers, judges, doctors, professors, teachers, and some other professions could not perform their duties without the appropriate educational background. For 604 laborers, we have no specific information about their educational background, but since the majority of them were employed by the Military-Technical Institute, it is safe to assume that they had a certain level of technical knowledge acquired in school or through internal courses.

According to available data, 59 of those executed had university degrees, two had higher education, 197 had a high school education, 887 had vocational education, and 133 had commercial education.

Since, before the war, in the Kingdom of Yugoslavia, a four-year primary education was mandatory, it can be assumed that everyone had some level of schooling.

Among those executed, there were a certain number of women. According to the data from documents stored with the "October 21st" memorial museum, 27 women were executed over these three days. Of these, 26 were shot in Kragujevac on October 20th and 21st and one was killed by a stray bullet in Grošnica. However, this number should be assumed provisional, until each individual case is investigated. While collaborating on the publication "The Women of Šumadija and Pomoravlje in the Worker's Movement and People's Liberation Struggle" (Žene Šumadije i Pomoravlja u radničkom pokretu i NOR), the author of this book was tasked with writing the biographies of the women who were.

An interesting issue arose from the investigation the execution of two women, a mother and daughter, Danica and Nadežda Maslač. Their names were found in the first, "German" list, and were later copied into all future lists. Research revealed that they were not executed at all, and their names appeared on the list of those executed because they gave their personal documents to a neighbor. Their neighbor was executed, and their personal documents ultimately found their way to those compiling the list of those executed, and their names remained in this list, uncontested, until the completion of this investigation.

An analysis of the age structure of those executed provides very interesting insights. According to the data, the oldest individual executed was Novak Lučić, who was 78 years old at the time, while the youngest victim was Dragiša Nikolić, who was born on December 20th, 1929. The execution encompassed 64 generations (different birth years) from 1863 to 1929, with no one born in 1864, 1866, and 1867. The largest number of those executed in Kragujevac was born in 1910 (97 individuals), whereas in the villages, it was in 1921 (23). Kragujevac and the villages cumulatively had the most executed born in 1911, with 108 individuals (93+15). A notable trend is the small number of those executed who were born in 1915/6/7/8/9. These were military conscripts who, after the capitulation, shared in the fate of the defeated army and ended up being taken as prisoners of war.

Data from the collected documentation negate some commonly accepted and known, tabooed beliefs, such as the execution of “fifteen children aged 8 to 12”, the execution of “300 students from the Kragujevac Gymnasium”, and the execution of “7.000 people.” Data preserved in the documentation provide the basis for the following conclusions:

- 40 children (37 in Kragujevac and three in the villages) of Serbian and Roma nationality between the ages of 11 and 15 were executed (born in 1926/7/8/9).
- 261 young men of high school age (born in 1922/3/4/5) were executed, including students of the First and Second Gymnasiums, the Teacher Training School, the Civil School, the Military-Technical School, and Craft Schools, as well as those in the same age group who were not students (farmers, workers, etc.). In Kragujevac, 220 young men were executed, and in the villages and additional 41. To this number, the 16 young men older than 19 years (born in 1920/1) for whom it is known that they were students should be added.
- It is certain that data on the number of those executed can never be final, and this question can never be definitively settled. Occasionally, though very rarely, researchers still discover new information about people who were executed but have never been documented as suffering such a fate. Names are also removed from the list when documents show they were not executed.

In terms of the nationality of those executed, most of them were Serbs, followed by Roma. Due to their surnames being the same, it is impossible to exactly tell them apart. It is also known that many Roma individuals identified as Serbs. Several Romani organizations from Kragujevac have been trying for years to identify executed Roma, but except for a modest amount of reliable data, everything else remains in the realm of assumptions and speculation.

Next in terms of the number of those executed were Jews. For a long time, there were 36 Jewish names, both men and women, on the list. However, this number has been supplemented with three new names, obtained from research into the suffering of Jews in Serbia conducted by Ženi Lebl.¹⁷¹ Her data shows that three Jews were brought in from Jagodina and executed in Kragujevac. Therefore, we now have information about 39 Jews executed. They were all executed on the evening of October 20th, near the Central Workshop.

Among those executed, there are also Slovenians (16), Russians (7), Croats (4), Muslims (3), Macedonians, Czechs, and Greeks. Most of the Slovenians executed were living in Kragujevac even before the war, working in the Military Factory, but there were also some refugees among them. One Slovenian, a refugee, was brought in from Gornji Milanovac with a group of hostages captured by the Germans on October 15th. The Russians and Croats who were executed also lived in Kragujevac before the war. It is difficult to determine the number of Macedonians executed. Before the war, many of them used Serbian surnames, especially those working and studying in Serbia. Interestingly, we received two requests by the sons of Macedonians executed to have their fathers' surnames altered. Of course, these were denied, and they kept the surnames they had at that time, as changing them would have meant altering history in line with contemporary social reality.

During the war, the Pension Fund Commissioner prepared tables and charts of families with the number of children, whose fathers were executed and were members of the Pension Fund.¹⁷² Although precious, this data only partially covers those executed and served solely as a starting point for more comprehensive research.

Available data shows that on October 20th and 21st, 2.381 individuals were executed in Kragujevac, including 2.355 men and 26 women. In regard to marital status (married, unmarried, and unknown), data was available for 1.710 men, while there was no data for 645 of them. Among those executed, 1.180 men were married (one divorced and two widowers) and 530 were unmarried. Out of the 1.180 married men, 218 had no children, data for 16 of them was missing, and 946 had between one and nine children. The highest number of children (nine) was fathered by Živojin Jovanović, born in 1871. In total, the 946 individuals with children who were executed left behind 2.131 orphaned children. Twenty children were born after their fathers had been executed. For six of those executed, it was their first child, for seven, the second child, for six, the third child, and for one, the fourth child.

Out of the 26 executed women, no additional data could be found for eight. Eleven were married (one was a widow), and seven were unmarried. For four married women, no data on the number of children was found. One had five children, four had two children each, and the one widowed woman had one child. Based on the available data, 15 children were left behind by the women who were executed.

Analysis of the locations where the executed people were arrested yields interesting data. We have reliable information on how many people the Germans had custody of before the arrests of October 18th and the mass arrests of October 20th. There were 53 people being held in the prison. Most of them were previously taken hostage, but there were also a couple of criminals.

In the bread queue in 1942.

Around 150 people were arrested on October 13th, before the third raid on Gornji Milanovac. These arrests ensued for security reasons, and 30 of those arrested were taken to Gornji Milanovac on October 14th, for the purpose of removing obstacles in the road. Since these were hostages, their arrests weren't random. It can be assumed that for at least some of them, there was an arrest list. As a rule, these were more prominent individuals, who were arrested at work, at home, or in the streets.

One hundred and twenty-five hostages were brought along from Gornji Milanovac. There were actually 133 hostages taken, 40 from Gornji Milanovac and 93 from the villages. However, since there were women among the hostages from Milanovac (8), they were released to their homes somewhere along the way. The remaining hostages from Milanovac, who were brought to Kragujevac, were all executed. However, there is reason to believe that there were more people from Milanovac than the documents mentioned.

On the evening of October 18th, Jews, nationalists, communists, members of their families, and sympathizers were arrested in their homes. This group also included three Jews who were brought in from Jagodina and the priest Andra Božić, who was arrested at home, in Badnjevac, on October 19th. Having long harbored animosity towards the priest, Marisav Petrović did not miss this opportunity to confront him. He stopped the armored train in Badnjevac, arrested Andra Božić, and brought him to Kragujevac by train.

Further arrests followed on October 20th. In a disorderly manner, people were arrested at home, at work, in the streets, in the market, near the Lepenica River, in school, at church, and in other places.

The information we have on the place of arrest covers 1.808 individuals executed, with no data available for 573 of them. A significant number were arrested at home (668), indicating that many were unemployed after the Military-Technical Institute ceased working.

Three hundred and fifty-six people were arrested at their place of work, 116 in the streets; 64 at the market, and 137 attending school. We know of an entire group of around 600 workers who were arrested while working on regulating the Lepenica River, but the documents contain data on only 278 of them. Other arrests ensued at the cinema, in the police station, in a tavern, in the municipality or court buildings, while people were visiting relatives, and the documents available to us mention one individual who was executed after having turned themselves in.

In the villages, only 31 out of 415 individuals were not arrested at home. Some were found on the streets, in taverns, shops, in churches, in the fields, and one was visiting relatives. One woman and one man were killed by stray bullets during the execution.

An analysis of the birthplaces of individuals executed provides interesting insights. It reflects the preexisting state of affairs, as well as the result of the refugee wave that ensued at the beginning of the conflict in Yugoslavia. The preexisting state of affairs paints a picture of a strong, dynamic, multi-ethnic Kragujevac. The industrial potential of the city attracted people not only from the immediate vicinity of the city, but also from other parts of Yugoslavia, bringing educated and skilled personnel to Kragujevac.

Among those executed in Kragujevac, 723 were born in Kragujevac, 877 were from the immediate city surroundings (Kragujevac district), 570 were from Serbia, 183 were from other parts of Yugoslavia, 22 were from abroad, and the birthplace of six of the individuals executed is unknown. Of those executed in the villages, 300 were born in the places of execution, 59 in nearby villages, 7 in Kragujevac, 32 somewhere in Serbia, and 18 in other parts of Yugoslavia.

Groups of those "born in Yugoslavia" and "born in Serbia", encompass those who lived and worked in Kragujevac even before the war, as well as refugees who found salvation in the city and its surroundings while escaping from the terror of occupying forces and the Ustashe in the Independent State of Croatia. Unfortunately, many of them went to their deaths in this German reprisal.

The analysis also provides interesting data on the initial letter of surnames and individual surnames of those executed. There were no people with surnames beginning with “Њ” (Nj) executed. This is the only initial that does not appear among the surnames of those executed. Overall, the highest number of individuals executed in Kragujevac and the surrounding villages had surnames starting with “M” (M) - 523, followed by “C” (S) - 278, “П” (P) - 253, “J” (J) - 237, “B” (V) - 193, “P” (R) - 189, and so on. This order is the same in Kragujevac, with slight variations in the surrounding villages.

Regarding the most frequent surname among those executed in Kragujevac and the villages, it was “Јовановић” (Jovanović) - 101, followed by “Ђорђевић” (Đorđević) - 78, “Петровић” (Petrović) - 51, “Марковић” (Marković) - 46, “Николић” (Nikolić) - 42, “Милосављевић” (Milosavljević) - 40, “Павловић” (Pavlović) - 35, and so on.

CONCLUSION

The situation in occupied Serbia in 1941 clearly points to the causes and reasons for the shootings in Kragujevac. Historical sources just confirm the facts. Broadly speaking, the causes for the shootings were the war that broke out with Germany, the general conditions of the occupation of Serbia, and the beginning of a liberation struggle against the occupiers. Although it is the legitimate right of any occupied people to fight for their freedom, the occupiers applied repression and retaliation everywhere, in order to pacify the occupied territory.

It is a historical truth that it was only in Serbia that the occupiers provided, through the order of General Franz Böhme, formal/legal grounds for the implementation of draconian reprisals of “one hundred for one” against the local population. Such cruelty was not witnessed in any other Western European country under occupation. It had, however, been seen in Belarus and Russia, as well as directed against the Jewish population. The Serbian people as a whole found themselves in a group of nations subjected to genocidal destruction by multiple states and their genocidal policies. In that kind of situation, every spark in Serbia set off fires and triggered harsh reprisals. The sparks that caused the reprisals in Kragujevac, were German losses suffered in battles against the chetniks and partisans on October 16th, 1941, near Dumača, between Ljuljaci and Bare.

Despite the nature of the situation being crystal-clear, there were nevertheless many attempts made to introduce other elements into the causes and reasons for the shootings.

The Ljotićevci, starting with Marisav Petrović, and followed by their historians and publicists in emigration, have in this sense made a special contribution. In their opinion, the bodies of German soldiers killed being desecrated was an additional reason for the tragedy happening. In his testimony, on December 22nd, 1970, Marisav Petrović writes: “And to make the tragedy of the Serbian people in Šumadija even greater, the partisans and chetniks vented their satanic fury on dead German soldiers. They cut off their private parts and placed them in their mouths. The Germans photographed this disturbing scene and sent it to their higher commands.”¹⁷³ In light of historical sources, this claim is meaningless. Hostages taken by the to Gornji Milanovac testified that the Germans collected their dead and wounded and placed them in trucks. There is no mention of the bodies being desecrated by von Bischoffshausen, Major König, any staff of any German division, not even General Franz Böhme. Why would they remain silent if something like that had really happened? Especially since the Operational Diary of the 704th Division, dated October 3rd, states in regards to a search unit providing assistance to a convoy that had suffered an attack on the road from Kragujevac to Topola: “1 soldier missing, 1 severely wounded, and 21 mutilated corpses found.”¹⁷⁴

Post-war writers and historians continued this trend but added primarily ideological connotations to the event. Dragoljub Petrović writes: “According to the current state of affairs, it could be argued that the real reason was that the Germans considered the population of Kragujevac and its surroundings to be left-leaning.”¹⁷⁵

Branislav Božović sees the reasons for the shootings in the fact that “Kragujevac was an industrial center, home to the Military-Technical Institute... This must be added to the occupiers' viewing Kragujevac as a city of rebellion and revolutionary actions, an important Serbian center and the heart of Šumadija, a hotbed of communism, etc.”¹⁷⁶

Blagoje Stokić writes that “the German soldiers who were killed and wounded were not the cause (of the shooting).”¹⁷⁷ They were not the cause; they were the pretext for the shooting.

Some historians even go so far as to look for causes of the shootings in Svetozar Marković and the “Red Flag of Self-Government” (Crveni barjak samouprave), in the communist victory in the local elections of 1920, in the People's Front of Freedom (Narodni front slobode). In general, the causes of the shooting are found in some kind of “red” history of Kragujevac, which the Germans were allegedly aware of and because of which Kragujevac had to pay.

Also, almost all of these authors attempt to prove that Kragujevac was chosen intentionally, so as to be a frightening example for the rest of Serbia. They all cite Harald Turner and the words of his report from September 21st, 1941: “For reasons of prestige, if nothing else, it is necessary to act with extreme ruthlessness in at least one specific location, so as to intimidate other parts of Serbia.”¹⁷⁸ With these words, they attempt to argue that “one specific location” refers exclusively to Kragujevac. However, Turner specifies what he considers to be “extreme ruthlessness”, where this action should be carried out, as well as the goal of this kind of action in the next few sentences: “My personal opinion is that a complete evacuation of the area west of Šabac should be carried out, in the bend between the Sava and Drina rivers... Since winter is approaching, and, therefore, it will soon be impossible to stay outdoors in the mountains, pushing women and children into the southern barren mountains would pose a catastrophe in terms of food for the insurgents... This kind of action, though seemingly cruel, guarantees, in my opinion, the creation of fear and trepidation and will, due to concern that their families will not be treated this way, awaken a number of those forcibly driven to the insurgents, as well as their associates.¹⁷⁹

Nevertheless, this is in contradiction with their other main stance, which is that the Germans intentionally reduced the number of those shot. If the Germans wanted to make Kragujevac a “frightening example for the whole of Serbia”, it would make sense that, for the purpose of intimidation, they would even increase the number of those shot.

However, when all these various political and ideological elements are removed from this tragedy, we are left with only the bare facts that are unrelenting. What remains are those who were shot.

After World War II, the new authorities allowed themselves to destroy the crosses of the executed, desecrate their graves, and hurt their families' deepest feelings.

Many years after the war, by insisting that the number of those executed was 7.000, the identity of these people had been lost. These unfortunate people had their names taken away from them, and all of them became nameless prisoners of a mythical number. In the meantime, a monumental museum, memorial park, and dozens of monuments within it were built. Perhaps our executed fellow citizens do not ask us for all of that. Perhaps they're only asking for their names. Because every individual's death, even though it disappeared into the sea of death that was drowning Kragujevac and the surrounding villages in those days, is primarily a personal loss. Without names and surnames, without numbers, it would be as if they had never even lived.

SUMMARY

The Kragujevac Massacre of October 21st 1941, is one of the most heinous crimes committed by German forces on Serbian soil during World War II, both in terms of the number of victims and the manner of execution. During the war and the post-war period, this crime came to symbolize the suffering of the Serbian people.

Refusing to accept their homeland being occupied, the Serbian people responded with sabotage, diversions, and an uprising. In September 1941, the uprising grew into a nationwide movement. To order to alleviate the pressure suffered by their troops on the Eastern Front, Germany took decisive measures to suppress the uprising. This task was entrusted to General Franz Böhme, and from September 22nd to early December 1941, he succeeded in quelling the uprising in Serbia. The aftermath of this action was a scorched Serbia and bloody traces of approximately 26.000 killed.

Following Böhme's order issued on October 10th 1941, the Germans carried out multiple mass shootings in Serbia as a form of reprisal. The reason for the shooting were German losses suffered in a conflict with the combined chetnik and partisan forces on October 16th 1941, on the road leading from Kragujevac to Gornji Milanovac. In that battle, the German forces suffered 10 dead and 26 wounded soldiers. According to the provisions of General Franz Böhme's order, for every soldier killed, 100 people were to be executed, and for every soldier wounded, 50 people. The order to carry out the shootings in Kragujevac was given by the commander of the 749th Regiment, major Otto Desch, while the shooting itself was supervised by the commander of the 1st Battalion of the 724th Regiment, Major Paul König. At the intervention of the District Commander of Kragujevac, Otto von Bischoffshausen, shootings began on October 19th, in the surrounding villages, as these were considered to be “bandit hideouts”. As the number of those executed was insufficient, it was decided to continue the shootings in the city itself. On October 20th, thousands of people were arrested in Kragujevac and imprisoned in artillery sheds on the outskirts of the city. In the evening, the prisoners from the local prison and a Jewish-Communist group were executed. The shootings of October 21st started at 7 A.M. and ended at 2 P.M. Several thousand people were executed, including high school students from Kragujevac and boys aged 11 to 15.

Estimations of the number of individuals executed vary, ranging from 2.300 according to German sources to as high as 12.000. Amongst the Serbian people, it is widely accepted that around 7.000 people were executed. This is also the number currently acknowledged by official historiography.

The “October 21st” memorial museum has, after years of research and collecting data from all available sources, as well as on-site investigations, compiled data on 2.796 individuals executed and 61 survivors over the three days of shootings.

IDEOLOGICAL USE AND ABUSE OF THE SERBIAN TRAGEDY¹⁸⁰

Abstract

In this brief text, all or at least most aspects of the ideological abuse of the victims in Kragujevac are touched upon. Their sacrifice became a kind of monopoly for communist ideology and manipulation, and for a long time, it was not dared to be addressed. More terrifying than insensitivity was the ideological abuse of the victims. The magnitude of their misfortune was used to prove attitudes that were hardly sustainable: how far along an environment is on the socialist path, the righteousness of personnel, and other factors. This was not that long ago, and it should not be forgotten how Kragujevac and Kraljevo almost "competed" in the number of victims. No longer were the people important, who they were, and what they were. What was crucial was the personal or political gain that could be drawn from their sacrifice.

Now is the moment summarize to the last two centuries and recapitulate all our victories and defeats. With a pronounced sense of freedom and justice, and a duty to oneself and one's tradition, we often paid an excessively high price. The inconsistency between the aforementioned ideals and the obligation of maintaining our people, or rather, the survival of our people, is striking. Defending freedom and honor, but also waging war when needed and even when not, sometimes defending the interest of others, the Serbian people have achieved many victories, but have also paid the highest price – countless human lives, in some regions reaching the point of biological extinction.

Then came the defeats, which lead to the loss of many parts of the Serbian ethnical space. The sacrifices laid down for our victories were not recovered in our defeats. In the end, we entered a zone of demographic decline, surrounded by nations and religions with hypernatality, facing the danger of finally disappearing in the 21st century.

When I speak of recapitulation, I mean facing the truth, which will surely be painful, but without it, we cannot move forward. I want us to acknowledge our own ignorance, our lack of wisdom, our wrong choices and deluding ourselves with myths. We have had enough of being proud of our history, which all soaked in the blood in our people. Before just one of our sacrifices, and there have been tens and hundreds of thousands, all our defiance and pride fade, all our freedom-loving traditions. Haven't we learned to at least once preserve ourselves instead of always succumbing to perdition? To speak about pride because we died and because we were killed can only be done by those who hate the Serbian people and by those Serbs who prefer ideology to their own people and who killed their own people with no less fervor than the occupiers.

Today, historians and history have two extremely important tasks: to debunk the lies of communist historiography and to list all our victims from the last war. So many lies have been told and written about the "NOB (People's Liberation Struggle) and revolution" that their burden has become unbearable. It is these lies that have shaped our consciousness and directed our actions for half a century. The victory of truth will mean awakening our people from a different ideological hypnotic dream. However, if we want to be worthy of our ancestors and deserve the respect of our descendants, we must also change the attitude we have towards our victims. The least we can do is to record all of them, with their names and surnames. If we don't do that, their tragedy will be absolute. If we forget them, it will be as if they never existed.

From these general points, I want to return to a specific event, the shooting in Kragujevac in 1941. But when I speak about Kragujevac, I mean Kraljevo, Belgrade, Šabac, Draginac, or any other execution site. It's all the same principle.

In the tragedy of Kragujevac, the causes, reasons, the event itself and the victims are undisputed, as is the case with any historical event. However, when different actors on the historical stage, especially the victors, with their own politics and ideology, pursue an interest, the truth is left in ruins.

Historically speaking, the beginning of the story of the shootings in Kragujevac is tied to the capture of the 6th company of the 920th Infantry Battalion in Gornji Milanovac. However, after the war, the victors deemed it miserably insufficient for such a small event to be the cause of the Kragujevac tragedy. In the search for a "significant" cause, no effort was spared, even reaching, neither just nor necessary, Svetozar Marković, not to mention the "red" international and war history of the city. As the Germans were well aware of all of this, Kragujevac, according to them, was chosen to serve as an "intimidating example for the whole of Serbia." The main argument for this assertion is found in the words of the report by State Secretary Dr. Harald Turner from September 21st. Turner, among other things, states in his report: "As for the purgative action itself, I believe ... For reasons of prestige, if nothing else, it is necessary to act with extreme ruthlessness in at least one specific location, so as to intimidate other parts of Serbia." There is no historian, chronicler, or publicist who, writing about the Kragujevac shootings, has not quoted Turner, and who has not begun the quote with the words "... Turner also published in his report what he exactly means by purgative action and which space it refers to is of no importance to them."

But this is not where the abuse of this document ends. One of the following sentences from Turner's report: "... the majority of males in this region are grouped into bands and belongs to Mihailović's troops..." was almost never to be found in the writings of our historians. A sentence would be taken out of context, and placed in another context, and an entirely different meaning would be obtained. Also, the thesis about Kragujevac as an intimidating example is, moreover, in direct contradiction with another widely accepted assumption about the Germans minimizing the crimes committed there. Despite being ready to accept the absence of any kind of logic, it is still difficult to reconcile the claim that someone wants to intimidate you with someone diminishing the horrors of their crimes.

The historical truth is that both chetniks and partisans participated in the liberation of Gornji Milanovac. German sources prove this, and it's even written about in our historiography. However, many of our prominent historians did not even flinch when attributing the glory of that victory solely to the Partisans. Historiography of the Chetnik provenance speaks of this event as a joint action, and is, in that part at least, more objective and closer to the truth.

Continuing the trace of events, there is not a single detail before the shootings, around the shootings or after the shootings that hasn't somehow been modified in the post-war period so as to create a desired version of what happened. Although, for example, the number of hostages (30) taken by the Germans in the third raid on Gornji Milanovac is reliably known, it has been senselessly inflated to 150 or 200. During this raid, there was a conflict with the Germans near Ljuljaci. This event is of exceptional importance because it served as a pretext for the shootings in Kragujevac. The closest source about this event and, therefore, the most reliable one is Information No. 6t of the Kragujevac Partisan Unit from October 18th, which states: "Partisans and chetniks of Draža Mihailović jointly encountered this human scum. In fierce battle..." etc. However, most of those who have written about this event seem to have ignored this document completely. The claim is that the Chetniks abandoned their position and fled, leaving the Partisans to fight on their own. However, while there is no mention of chetnik losses in Partisan reports about this battle, there is mention of nine deceased Chetniks: two lieutenants aren't mentioned by name and surname, three non-commissioned officers, a former gendarmerie sergeant, and three fighters. The fact that there were losses suffered by the "bandits," as the Germans called them, is confirmed by their sources too. What they disagree on is the number.

Another actor on the stage in Serbia and the tragedy of Kragujevac felt the need to distort facts and adapt them to their own "truth". These were the Ljotićevci. In their publications (it would be difficult to call it historiography) about the shootings in Kragujevac, one falsehood is constantly present - the desecration of the corpses of deceased Germans. According to the Ljotićevci, this is what provoked the anger of the Germans and led to the shootings in Kragujevac. Many of their members mention this, including Marisav Petrović, commander of the 5th Volunteer Battalion. The biggest flaw of this claim is that the Germans themselves don't mention it. After all, they had the least reasons to remain silent about it, as it would have served them well in justifying this unprecedented crime in light of their own conscience and global public opinion. The question seems justified why the Germans would remain silent about desecration, if there was any, when in a different case, the October 2nd conflict near Svetinja, they executed a command coming from higher up regarding the desecrated bodies of German soldiers. One man, Ratibor Jovanović, the only one of the 30 Kragujevac hostages led to Gornji Milanovac who managed to survive the execution on October 21st, gave a post-war statement to the State Commission. In that statement, Ratibor Jovanović says that the battle near Ljuljaci lasted about two hours, and that after the battle the Germans collected their dead and wounded, loaded them onto trucks, and headed towards Kragujevac. This statement clearly shows that the Germans did not leave their dead behind, and that the chetniks and partisans were not in physical contact with dead German soldiers, definitively ruling out any possibility of the desecration of their corpses. The historiography of the side victorious in the conflict paints an extremely one-sided and simplified picture of the role played by the Ljotićevci. Nothing can, however, justify what they did. They served the occupiers. Independently of the German forces, honoring their own unknown criteria, they arrested leftists and nationalists, many of whom had escaped the Germans. They particularly "excelled" at arresting Roma. Also, the Ljotićevci organizing any kind of rescue mission is unfeasible. This could maybe be argued if they had in any way diminished the crimes committed by the Germans, but they even amplified them with their dishonorable "trade", giving five or ten Roma in exchange for one of their supporters. Instead of those they had saved, others were executed. The Germans only cared about the number. Nevertheless, the fact remains that they brought out many more people from the artillery sheds than they had supporters. Among those they brought out there were many students. To all of them they were saviors. For those who remained in the artillery sheds, they were murderers, equal to the men who actually killed them.

Although there are hundreds of statements from actors involved in this crime, including those who managed to survive the shootings, hostages, their families and descendants, Ljotićevci, and Germans, it is still difficult to completely piece together the mosaic of events. This creates a space for manipulation. Developing the thesis of the "red city" required that the city stays red even in its dying moments. Many people have attributed slogans about the Communist Party of Yugoslavia, the Soviet Union, and the Red Army. However, some cases, based on witness statements, can be dismissed as pure fabrications and lies. For others, this isn't possible because there are no witnesses to confirm or refute the claims. A particular form of abuse of these unfortunate people is to attribute one person's defiant statement to someone else, to modify or even fabricate statements by certain individuals. The most striking example is the case of the priest Andra Božić from Badnjevac and the director of the teacher's training school, Miloje Pavlović. Andra Božić from Badnjevac, coming from a famous family, was a fierce Serbian nationalist and a supporter of Draža Mihailović. His daughter Radmila was a supporter of the Ravna Gora movement and died in a State security administration (Uprava državne bezbednosti – UDBA) concentration camp, in 1946. Marisav Petrović personally sent his Ljotićevci to arrest the famous priest Andra, on October 18th. At the “Kralj Petar” primary school, where Andra Božić was imprisoned, Marisav and Andra encountered each other, leading to a verbal duel. Seizing his moment, Marisav said to Andra, “Can’t you see, priest Andro that your life depends on me?” Proud and defiant, Andra calmly replied: “Well, Marisav, if my life depends on you, I don’t need it. I’d rather be shot than live by your mercy.” This famous sentence was attributed to the director, Miloje Pavlović, after the war. Today, it can be reliably determined, based on witness statements that Andra Božić uttered this sentence, and Miloje Pavlović did not. The truth is that there was a verbal confrontation between Miloje and Marisav, in which Marisav accused Miloje of educating ten generations of communists, but Miloje did not utter this sentence. So, why and to what end did this substitution occur? The post-war liberators latched onto Marisav’s accusation of Miloje educating ten generations of communists, even though Marisav could in no way not attribute communism to Miloje Pavlović as Miloje had no connection to communism at all. He was a veteran of the Salonica Front, a state official, and the leader of the Sokol in Kragujevac. He had numerous wartime and peacetime decorations. However, he was also opposed to joining the Tripartite Pact. Be that as it may, both Andre and Miloje were much greater individuals in life (and they remained great in death) than those unfortunate manipulators will ever be. Also, statements from other people, which are undoubtedly true, are not mentioned and are gradually pushed into oblivion by being looked over. All of this is due to ideological bias because, after all, how can someone who is not a communist or at least a leftist feel pride and defiance.

Nevertheless, the most crucial topic, the topic of all topics regarding the tragedy in Kragujevac, is the number of those executed.

It is logical to assume that those who executed the shootings, those who buried the victims, and those who had someone shot would have the most accurate information on the matter.

For the Germans, the ones who were carrying out the shootings, statements indicated that they counted people in groups, separating them if there were too many or adding if there were too few. That same, in an announcement posted throughout the city, they stated that they had executed 2.300 people.

After the shootings, teams were formed that spent several days handling the burials. Based on the statements made by people who were part of these teams, it is possible to roughly estimate the number of people buried in about half of the 30 mass graves in Šumarice. A leader of one of these teams, who recorded in his notes how many people were buried in each grave, stated in a testimony given to the State Commission for Establishing War Crimes that, in his opinion, “around 3000-3500 people were killed or buried.” It is evident that even he did not have data from the entire execution site, and therefore, provided an approximate number of those executed.

After the liberation of Serbia, the City Commission within the State Commission for determining the Crimes of the Occupiers and Their Collaborators operated in Kragujevac for months. After collecting thousands of statements, the City Commission sent a report to the Provincial Commission in Belgrade, on July, 1945. At the very end of the report, it was written: “Based on data collected, the total number of those executed is 2324. This is the total number of those shot according to the information available to this commission.”

This is an official document from the legal body of a state and, as such, served as the basis for the indictment by the Yugoslav Military Court against the ones who authorized and executed the crimes in Kragujevac. The trial took place at the Nuremberg Military Tribunal number 5, in July 1947.

The “October 21st” memorial museum systematically investigates and collects data on the shootings and the victims. Based on these investigations, a comprehensive database has been established, enabling the creation of a file on each individual executed. Each record contains extensive information, corresponding to data from documents and objects collected. This allows anyone, be it a family member, journalist, researcher, or other interested party, to obtain instant access to all available information about an executed individual. Currently, the "October 21st" museum has a collection of data on 2803 individuals who were executed - men, women, and children, as well as 59 survivors from October 20th and 21st, 1941. This includes 411 persons executed and 21 survivors from the surrounding villages on October 19th, as well as 2392 executed and 38 survivors from Kragujevac, on October 19th, 20th, and 21st. The collection of documents held by the "October 21st" memorial museum is currently the most complete and reliable source of information on the executions in Kragujevac.

From the standpoint of history, everything else is either an impression or a personal opinion. Different data brought up during the war by various sides, in the country or in exile, is not meant to be accurate, as it genuinely cannot be. It is more accurate to say that it has utility, and propaganda value.

Two of our distinguished researchers, Venceslav Glišić and Milan Borković, estimate that around 3.000 people were executed in Kragujevac. Venceslav Glišić emphasizes that, when determining the number of those executed, attention should be paid to two things: "that the Germans attempted to conceal the truth of this heinous crime from the global public and, for this reason, destroyed all lists of those executed as early as 1943. Second: surviving victims, when giving statements, were impressed by the enormous number of people gathered and the tragic nature of the proceedings and therefore estimated that there were more than 7000 people executed."

There is a popular story in Kragujevac, about the testimony given in Nuremberg by Živojin Jovanović, a man who survived the shooting on October 20th. He claimed that there were 7000 people executed, based on the number of black flags displayed on individual houses and the number of koliva brought to the local church. Many historians uncritically included this story in their research, elevating it to the status of pristine evidence. However, this story is also only partially accurate. Specifically, the part about the flags and koliva is accurate because he indeed mentions them, but the part about the number of individuals executed is not. A translated transcript of the statement given by Živojin Jovanović' to the court is kept at the Military-Historical Institute. In it, he states three times that 8000 people were executed in Kragujevac.

After 18 years of researching executions in different ways, I can conclude that the dilemma about the number of those executed was imposed but is in itself completely meaningless. Is there anyone who would say that it is a small crime to, for example, kill 2.800 people by God's truth? It's not about numbers, where one number is greater or smaller than another. It's about people - people who were born to someone, raised by someone, those who gave birth to someone, people who rejoiced in someone and people who had someone rejoice in them. Is the number still important to anyone, except for us to know each and every one of them, by their name and surname, so as not to forget anyone? And it could have happened and it still can happen.

In Kragujevac, for a long time, it was the number that was important - not for the sake of knowing, but for some other reason. By clumping these unfortunate people into that large number, their identities were lost. For a long time, any mention of names and surnames was undesirable, because listing names could not add up to that number. Consequently, for more than thirty years after the State Commission's work, nobody in Kragujevac seriously involved themselves in researching and collecting data on the victims of the execution. We were on the verge of once again, this time definitively, killing these people by taking away their names and turning them into mere numbers. Fortunately, this did not happen in Kragujevac.
